Moody's investor's agency issues report

By LARRY SHIELDS
Staff Writer

The Moody's investor's service agency downgraded the city's general obligation tax limited rating from A1 to Aa3 late last week.

Auditor Jim Armeni said he was "disappointed" but it has happened to 800 other municipalities in the country.

"It could have been worse, considering."

Armeni said, "I've been told this is happening all over" and explained the rating is "only for the general obligation debt."

The city's general obligation limited tax debt is $2.97 million.

He said those were street projects and land purchases and didn't concern water and sewer funds which are close to an AAA rating since they lack debt and have cash reserves.

"We were at a high level, mid-grade rating and not a long-term risk not to repay the debt," Armeni said, adding the last re-evaluation was six years ago.

He said Moody's saw the deficiency in 2009's cash carryover.

He also explained that Salem is part of Appalachia, something that has some cities defaulting.

The current rating is a mid-level rating, he said that is "still a fairly strong grade rating, but the city could have some impairment ... we need to have adequate cash flow. I've said before to council we need a cash reserve and flow. We need to have a plan to cut costs; we're doing this ..."

Moody's said the city's financial position had "narrowed," noting it was "heavily reliant on economically sensitive income taxes" and the recent financial challenges caused a draw down on the general fund with the reallocation to capital funds into it.

It said the city's "financial condition is largely dependent on income tax collections, which account for approximately 60 percent of the general fund revenues" while pointing out fiscal year 2009 ended with income tax receipts down 7.8 percent from 2008.

In 2008, the city collected $4,009,565, a record.

who's been parked in different vehicles near her bus stop watching her since last week.

The Valley Road woman called at 10:03 a.m. Monday to report they started noticing the suspicious vehicles last Tuesday when a white van drove past slowly and the men inside watched her daughter walk home.

On Wednesday, the girl noticed the same men staring at her, only this time they were in a blue truck with a cap on it. On Thursday, she noticed the same men in a different blue truck parked beside a house on Valley Road watching her walk to the house.

On Friday, the mother said she went outside to watch for the men and saw an old blue Ford SUV

Despite fines, hits won't stop for Steelers

Pittsburgh not about to change its style of play

PITTSBURGH — James Harrison and the Pittsburgh Steelers thrive on physicality in a league that is forcefully penalizing, fining and rebuking players who cross an imaginary line that appears to get redefined from week to week.

The Steelers and their three-time Pro Bowl linebacker admittedly are confused about how to play in this new, no-dangerous-hits-allowed NFL. Hall of Fame linebacker Jack Lambert once complained that quarterbacks should be fitted for skirts as the league moved to protect them, and the rules back in the 1970s were far less restrictive than today's.

The Steelers (7-3) never have been penalized more than they were during their 35-3 rout of the Raiders on Sunday — 163 yards' worth of flags that once fluttered on four consecutive plays. Nine more penalty yards than in any game in their 77-year history. Six penalties alone for personal fouls.

So do the Steelers react? Do they pull up and not inflict a hit that might draw a fine or a penalty, possibly allowing a player to get loose for yardage? Or do they keep on hitting, not worrying whether they cross the line or wind up with a substantial deduction in their next paycheck?

The Steelers say the answer is easy. If it costs them more flags, more fines, that's just part of doing business their way. As long as it doesn't cost them a championship.

"If you start letting penalties affect the way we play, we're not going to be the aggressive team that we've always been," linebacker LaMarr Woodley said.

"When we play like that, it brings more excitement to the game," center Maurkice Pouncey said. "The fans love it, the coaches love it. We're going at it. Let's play football."

The Steelers have the NFL's best defense over the last four seasons, a span in which they've allowed 600 yards fewer than any other team. So while the rules are changing, they're reluctant to stop being

Rivalry supercedes all else

For Ohio State, Michigan, it's all about The Game

Another Big Ten battle

COLUMBUS — Each year, the players and coaches from Michigan and Ohio State talk about how much they respect each other, how much they have in common and how pure their rivalry is.

Truth be told, the two sides can't even agree on who's got the most to win and lose in Saturday's 107th showdown.

No. 8 Ohio State has a stadium full of things on the line, including a share of a record-tying sixth straight Big Ten title and a spot in a Bowl Championship Series bowl.

The Buckeyes say the Wolverines would like nothing better than to ruin all of that for them.

"Just beating us would make those guys' year," Ohio State linebacker Brian Rolle said Monday. "That'd be like a national championship for those guys."

But that's not even remotely close to being the case, Michigan nose tackle

Mike Martin said.

"For us, it's not about Ohio State — it's about us and what we do," he said. "We don't go into this game to spoil Ohio State's season. It's all about us. We're playing for each other and doing what we can and what we can control."

Despite everything resting on the outcome — and its impact on untold other teams —

Reds' Votto wins NL MVP award

Cincy slugger is unanimous choice

By RONALD BLUM

NEW YORK — Joey Votto and Albert Pujols had a long conversation behind the batting cage before a game a few years ago.

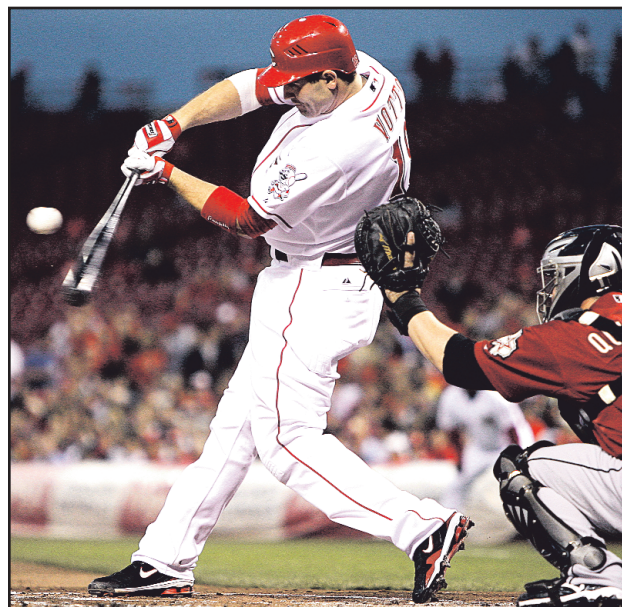

"There's something about a star player of that magnitude kind of pulling you in and saying, it's OK, we can talk, don't be a rookie right now, we're going to talk like men," Votto said. "I think he made me feel comfortable and a little more confident."

Lesson learned.

Vikings finally fire Childress

Constant drama, questionable coaching leads to dismissal

By DAVE CAMPBELL
Associated Press

EDEN PRAIRIE, Minn. (AP) — Hastily hired five seasons ago to bring order to a disheveled franchise, Brad Childress vowed to lead the Minnesota Vikings the only way he knew how — in case this was his only crack at being a head coach.

After an eventful and often tumultuous run marred recently by player unrest, livid fans and a boss angry about abrupt personnel decisions and a 3-7 start this year, Childress is out.

His conservative approach to offensive strategy and rigid communication style are gone, too, leaving behind a talented team that's out of the playoff race and a leadership vacuum in an organization trying hard to rebuild public good will toward a new stadium.

Childress was fired Monday, one season after he famously picked up Brett Favre at the airport, got a contract extension and came within a field goal of reaching the Super Bowl. Owner Zygi Wilf read from a script and wouldn't get into specifics about his decision a day after the Vikings were blown out at home by rival Green Bay.

"It's often difficult to articulate one reason why change is needed," Wilf said.

Wilf mentioned his "deep respect" for Childress, his hand-picked replacement for Mike Tice in 2006.

"He was an integral part of helping this franchise turn the corner and re-establishing ourselves as a force in the NFL," Wilf said, "as well as bringing in players who did an excellent job representing themselves and our organization in this community."

Death sentences rare in Ohio county where 3 killed

COLUMBUS (AP) — Records indicate that death sentences are rare in the central Ohio county where three people were slain and dismembered two weeks ago and their remains stuffed in a hollow tree trunk.

Over the past three decades, only three defendants in Knox County have faced charges that could result in a sentence of death.

A review of court records by The Associated Press finds just one of those defendants was condemned to die, but he died in prison of natural causes in 2000.

The only suspect in the recent slayings is being held on a $1 million bond on a single count of kidnapping, though more charges are expected next month.

A Knox County judge on Tuesday plans a hearing to weigh the evidence for the kidnapping count against 30-year-old Matthew Hoffman.

Remains believed those of missing woman found

BELLAIRE (AP) — Authorities believe they have found the remains of an elderly woman who disappeared from an Ohio retirement facility in April.

Civilian volunteers joined police in searching for Edge when she was reported missing. That search ended in May after searchers found no trace of her.

NASCAR

5 for 48: Johnson's titles speak for themselves

MIAMI (AP) — It was early Monday morning, and Jimmie Johnson was celebrating another NASCAR championship in the surf on South Beach.

His five NASCAR championship trophies had been placed delicately in the sand, and with rolled up pant legs, Johnson and crew chief Chad Knaus stepped into the water for one final photo commemorating their historic march through the record books.

Nobody in NASCAR can find the right adjective to describe Johnson's unprecedented five-year run. And his performance in Sunday's season finale, running second at Homestead-Miami Speedway to lock down his fifth consecutive title, should certainly have secured his legacy as one of the decade's most dominant athletes.

But after so many years of being either overlooked or disliked, Johnson has stopped caring what people think of him, or his resume.

"People tell me they hate me, but they respect me, and that's always cool," Johnson said. "In the moment, I think it's tough for fans to maybe look at what we have accomplished, because they want their guy to win and I understand that. But I know what we have done is respected sports-wide, not just in our little bubble we live in.

"But I don't need it to make me feel better about what we've done. I'm totally content based on our performance. Five in a row, no one has ever done it."

Nobody but Johnson and his No. 48 Hendrick Motorsports team, which continue to defy any reasonable expectations of performance, consistency and longevity.

See, Johnson has been very good from the very first day owner Rick Hendrick teamed him with Knaus and turned the duo loose in NASCAR's premier series. In nine seasons, they've amassed 53 wins and contended for the championship every single year.

Johnson has never finished lower than fifth in the standings, which happened twice: During his 2002 rookie season, and in 2005, when a blown tire in the season finale dropped him from second to fifth.

That race, when he failed to catch Tony Stewart for the championship, marked Johnson's third straight near-miss at winning NASCAR's highest honor. The failure nearly destroyed Johnson and Knaus, but team owner Rick Hendrick instead used the disappointment as motivation for the duo to finally break through in their pursuit of a championship.

Only they didn't stop at one. Johnson and Knaus have not looked back since that 2005 finale, knocking down championship after championship after championship.

The first four were impressive for the team's dominance alone.

The fifth one, after the first true test of the Johnson-Knaus reign was, as Johnson said, simply unbelievable.

Denny Hamlin took Johnson all the way to edge in this year's Chase for the Sprint Cup championship and nobody would deny that Hamlin outran him through most of the 10-race series. Kevin Harvick, who used consistency to take control of the regular season, lurked behind in third and never gave Johnson a chance to coast.

But there's a mental toughness required in being a champion, and through all these years, Johnson feels like he's mastered it. He tweaked Hamlin over the final few weeks with pointed barbs about nerves and pressure, all the while staying cool and calm.

It most certainly worked on Sunday, which turned into a battle of which driver made the fewest mistakes.

Hamlin was the loser of that fight, spinning early from contact with Greg Biffle that many believe was a brain-fade on Hamlin's part. And Harvick was caught speeding on pit road moments before a flawless pit stop pushed him into the lead, and the penalty took him out of race-winning contention.

That was Harvick's only true shot to win the title, and he settled for third in the race and third in the standings.

Johnson, who overcame several shaky pit stops from his crew, remained smooth and steady and became the first driver in the seven-year history of the Chase to come from behind in the season finale to win the title. He's also just the third driver since 1975 who trailed in the standings at the start of the final race to rally and win the championship.

"I'd go out and say right now I couldn't do what he's done, and people claim me to be the best thing since whatever," said Kyle Busch, winner of 86 races spanning six seasons in NASCAR's top three series. "I can't do what Jimmie's done."

"It's spectacular," Edwards said. "I think we are all witnessing something that is nothing short of spectacular."

And Johnson knows that, too. He doesn't care about popularity among mainstream sports fans, and he shrugs off suggestions that race car drivers aren't true athletes.

With five championship trophies sitting in front of him in the sand, he doesn't need confirmation that he ranks among the greatest of all-time.

And he won't say where he believes he ranks, either.

"I don't know if I can answer a question like that. I can't," he said. "The driver or a person should not be up there saying, 'I'm great.' That's just not my deal. At least me. I'm not going to do it.

"But I'm very proud of what we've done." As he should be.

BROWNS

FROM 1B

Since the AFL-NFL merger in 1970, teams that have been plus-5 in turnover margin have gone 363-16-2 — a .957 winning percentage. Also, teams that have recorded six takeaways in a game are an equally impressive 450-44-2, a .910 percentage. In the past 40 years, the Pittsburgh Steelers are 25-0 in those games. The Browns are 15-4.

Mangini simply shook his head Monday when asked if he could have imagined losing when his team had such a lopsided statistical advantage in turnovers.

"Nope," he said. "But we lived it."

This loss was tough to stomach on so many levels for the Browns (3-7), who showed improvement and progress in consecutive upsets of New Orleans and New England and an overtime loss last week to the New York Jets. Suddenly, those performances seem forgotten.

Cleveland's running game, so vital to the recent turnaround, was almost nonexistent as the Jaguars held powerful running back Peyton Hillis to 48 yards on 21 carries and Jacksonville's defensive front dominated the Browns' revamped line.

The Browns' offense scored just 10 points off the six turnovers. More troubling, on Cleveland's five drives after five consecutive turnovers, the Browns totaled minus-9 yards and did not complete a pass or pick up a first down.

After playing nearly flawless football in the second half, the Browns' defense gave up the game's biggest play, a 75-yard screen pass late in the fourth quarter. Jags' running back Maurice Jones-Drew darted in and around the entire Cleveland defense, with at least four Browns fanning on possible tackles, to set up Jacksonville's go-ahead TD with 1:20 remaining.

Mangini didn't have his best game, either. He and offensive coordinator Brian Daboll are under renewed criticism for Cleveland's conservative gameplan. Given excellent field position following the turnovers, the Browns chose to run the ball, hoping Hillis would finally bust a long run.

"We felt like we had some good answers there," Mangini said. "We didn't execute very well and our answers weren't as good as we thought they were. That's frustrating."

Mangini, too, burned up all three second-half timeouts before Cleveland's final, frenetic drive.

"That just can't happen," Mangini said.

And getting your healthiest quarterback hurt can't happen either. But it did.

In the third quarter, McCoy was injured on a sack, becoming the third Cleveland QB to sustain an ankle injury so far this season. McCoy left the stadium with a cowboy boot on his right foot and a plastic walking boot on his left.

Mangini confirmed McCoy's sprain, but was unclear when asked if it was a dreaded high ankle sprain like the ones that have kept Jake Delhomme and Seneca Wallace sidelined for weeks.

McCoy underwent more tests on Monday, and Mangini said he will wait to see if McCoy can practice on Wednesday before making any decision on a starter for Sunday's home game against Carolina. Wallace was McCoy's backup in Jacksonville with Delhomme as the No. 3 quarterback.

a team that doesn't brag about being intimidating, but tries to be exactly that.

Even if they're not exactly sure how they're supposed to play in this fines-are-flying league in which Harrison has been docked $80,000 for hits that weren't penalized and Woodley drew a $12,500 fine last week for a hit on Patriots quarterback Tom Brady.

Harrison was called to the NFL office in New York recently for a detailed explanation about how rules designed to protect players from injury are being enforced. But he's still unclear.

There was speculation that getting fined a total of $100,000, or one-seventh of his base pay, might cause Harrison to quit playing with the edge that's always evident in his game. That wasn't apparent when he had five tackles, two sacks, an interception, a forced fumble and a personal foul penalty against Oakland.

"I'm not one of the guys in the black and white stripe suits, so I'm just playing ball," Harrison said. "I came back (after getting fined) and started playing the way I've been taught to play. I'm not worrying about the calls."

Steelers safety Troy Polamalu was outspoken about the NFL's toughened stance against punishing hits, saying commissioner Roger Goodell and the league office have too much power to impose fines. He was less talkative about the issue Sunday, perhaps to avoid getting fined himself. But he did promise the Steelers won't change. "We can play the way we play," he said. "I don't imagine us changing our style."

Defensive coordinator Dick LeBeau also doesn't want his players letting up or pulling up, so the Steelers' philosophy for the rest of the season is to hit now, worry later. They're unwilling to alter their personality or identity, so that means playing to the whistle.

That is, if there is one. Referee Tony Corrente blew his whistle so much Sunday, he lost it on the field and had to borrow a replacement from a colleague. No surprise to safety Ryan Clark, who said the officials are as confused as the players. Any improperly placed hand, any misdirected helmet now can bring punishment, but the problem is sorting out what's happening at a very high rate of speed in a moment's time.

"The referees have to be on edge. They're at the point now where it's throw the flag first, and figure it out later," Clark said. "If we feel like we're making clean plays, we just have to keep playing that way."

On Sunday, the Steelers appeared to be worried more about bouncing back from an embarrassing 39-26 loss to New England than they were all the yellow that fluttered on Heinz Field's chewed-up grass for three-plus hours. Of course, that's easy to do when a game isn't competitive.

"We know what's going on around the league now. We have to do our best to play legally, but also to play to the best of our ability," Clark said. "We're an aggressive defense, though. We just have to keep playing."

head coaching jobs, will serve as interim head coach for the remainder of the season. He wasted no time in answering a big question: The 41-year-old Favre is still the starting quarterback despite his 17 interceptions and looming retirement, whenever that may come.

"There's no hesitation from me in that regard," Frazier said, later adding: "I'm of the belief that Brett Favre is going to get it going and the turnovers are going to come down and we're going to get going as a football team."

Frazier wore a suit and a solemn look at the podium during a news conference, looking like he was already auditioning for the permanent job. He said he expected the full effort of his players for the rest of the season, despite the shattered title hope.

"The challenge our players have is to understand that other people around the league are taking a look at that tape, and you owe it to your teammates and your family to go out there and play hard every single snap," Frazier said.

Childress is the second NFL coach to be fired this season after Wade Phillips was let go by Dallas.

"I am proud of our accomplishments and believe the foundation of this football team is stronger today than when I became head coach," he said in a statement released by the team.

Childress went 40-37 with the Vikings, including 1-2 in the playoffs. He was all in with Favre, riding his incredible 2009 season to the NFC championship game and then going down this year under the weight of his struggles to regain that rhythm. But the team's problems transcend Favre.

Asked if he'd give Favre more freedom to run the offense as he saw fit, Frazier laughed.

"If you ask Brett that question I'm sure he would say, 'Give me all the latitude in the world.' But we do have a system in place," Frazier said. "There may be some tweaks to the system. We're going to talk about that."

Players had left the building by the time Wilf and Frazier finished with their news conference, but the team distributed statements from several players.

"Brad Childress is a good guy, a man with strong faith and a great family. I wish him the best in the future," Favre said. "I think we all, starting with me, could have done more to make this a successful season." Later, wide receiver Greg Lewis used Twitter to call the NFL a "what have you done for me lately league."

"And lately we have stunk. Coach Childress took the fall," Lewis tweeted.

Childress took over in Minnesota after spending seven years with Philadelphia, including four as the offensive coordinator.

He was chosen by Wilf to instill discipline and demand better off-the-field behavior from a team that was embarrassed the year before by a bye-week boat party gone bad and a number of other legal problems for players.

However, Childress stumbled in his first year and never fully gained the faith of the fans — or some of his players. The Vikings went from 6-10 to 8-8 to 10-6 to 12-4 in his first four seasons, but this year's mess grew too big to salvage. According to an ESPN.com report last week, Childress's contract — extended in November 2009 — had $6.6 million remaining on it for 2011 and 2012. This season almost seemed destined for doom, given how smoothly it all went in 2009 until the very end and how well Favre played last year by taking care of the ball and making age-defying throws into the end zone. With Favre failing to commit until August and injuries throwing the wide receivers out of whack, the offense has never been truly in sync. The relationship between Favre and Childress, tense at times in 2009, seemed to sour further when Favre threw three ill-fated interceptions in the Oct. 24 game against the Packers, lost to his old team and was sharply criticized afterward by his coach.

Then the situation really worsened following a loss at New England when wide receiver Randy Moss, acquired in a trade for a third-round draft pick just four weeks earlier, went out of his way to praise the Patriots and criticize Childress in a post-game rant.

Childress got rid of him the next day, leaving Wilf reportedly angry that wasn't in the loop right away. There were anonymous reports of growing dissatisfaction in the locker room, and Childress and Harvin got into a heated argument one day over an MRI test Harvin didn't want on his sprained ankle.

Fans made no secret about their frustration, either, with thousands of "Fire Chilly" signs distributed on Nov. 7 outside the stadium before the Vikings played Arizona and several chants breaking out from the seats during the Packers game on Sunday.

"The challenge I have before me is to make sure that we're going in the right direction and at the end of the year we're not a 3-13 team," Frazier said.

Nebraska's Pelini apologizes for tirades

Huskers head coach was furious during team's loss to Texas A&M

By ERIC OLSEN
Associated Press

LINCOLN, Neb. — Nebraska coach Bo Pelini tried to tamp down the frenzy surrounding his program Monday, apologizing for his sideline tirades and assuring fans that his star quarterback hasn't quit the team.

Pelini's volatile behavior became the story line of Saturday's 9-6 loss at Texas A&M, more so than the fact the 16th-ranked Cornhuskers now probably have to beat resurgent Colorado on Friday to win the Big 12 North after starting the season with national championship hopes.

Pelini's foul-mouth berating of the officials and quarterback Taylor Martinez made for must-see TV for ABC, but it also drew an admonishment from Nebraska chancellor Harvey Perlman and criticism from fans who say Pelini embarrassed the state and program.

"I always believe it's OK to disagree with a call," Pelini said.

"It's not OK to make it personal. At times during that game, probably in my quest to fight for the kids on our football team, I let it get personal. For that, once again, I'm sorry. I regret that."

Pelini's sideline rants have been scrutinized since he took over in 2008, but his rage seemed to peak in the A&M game as the Aggies (8-3, 5-2 Big 12) shut down the Huskers (9-2, 5-2).

Officials drew his ire for calling 16 penalties for 145 yards, both school records. Among them were seven personal fouls — including an unsportsmanlike conduct penalty on Pelini.

Martinez left the game with five minutes in the first quarter after aggravating his right ankle sprain, and he didn't escape Pelini's wrath, either.

Martinez, who returned to play the second half, was on the sideline in the second quarter when Pelini approached him. The red-shirt freshman showed no emotion as the coach yelled at him, pointed his left index finger at him and poked him just above the collar.

Pelini declined to say what prompted the exchange, which was captured by ABC cameras and was viewed more than 109,000 times on YouTube in the 24 hours after the video was posted. Martinez does not speak to the media except after games, and then not always.

"My policy is I don't talk about what happens in our family," Pelini said. "I can say this: the things that are out there speculating over what that was (about) are completely off base. Taylor is with the football team. He and I are on the same page and there are no issues there. We put all that behind us."

Pelini acknowledged that Martinez was not with the team for its Sunday "shake-out," which he described as a short jogging session that helps players loosen up after the previous day's game.

Martinez's absence sparked Internet rumors that he had quit the team.

Pelini said Martinez's absence was excused and that he wouldn't have been able to jog anyway because of his injury.

Pelini said Martinez would play against Colorado if he's healthy.

Perlman, the chancellor, on Sunday called Pelini's behavior "unfortunate" and said it did not represent the university or the football program well. Pelini and Perlman discussed Saturday's chain of events, and the coach said he has the administration's full support.

"We're on the same page," Pelini said. "I have total respect for him, the administration, the job they have to do."

Pelini said he told the chancellor he would tone down his behavior.

"Yeah, absolutely," he said. "Believe me, I assured him it won't happen again."

Perlman declined to comment Monday.

Big 12 spokesman Bob Burda said Pelini would face no disciplinary action from the league. Burda said beyond in-game penalties that could be assessed, the conference leaves it up to the institution to address matters relating to sideline decorum.

Pelini has a reputation for his temper.

He drew an unsportsmanlike conduct penalty for haranguing an official in the 2008 game against Virginia Tech. That same season, he blew up during the Oklahoma game, cursing and yelling at officials, assistant coaches and players, grabbing one by the facemask.

"Perception is reality, so that's something I've got to fix," Pelini said the week after the '08 Oklahoma game. "I understand that. I'm a highly emotional guy. I've got to be careful."

Last year, after one second was put back on the clock for Texas to kick the game-winning field goal in the Big 12 championship game, Pelini flew into a rage, shouting that the Longhorns were given special treatment so they could play in the BCS title game.

Pelini said fans who disapprove of his behavior should consider the integrity with which he has rebuilt the program and that his players generally stay out of trouble.

"You hope they look at the heart of who you are and what you've done and what you've built up over a certain amount of time, and you hope people are in your corner," he said. "I bust my butt each and every day for this program, and for the kids and the university. If I embarrassed anybody by what I did, I'm sorry. That's as far as I can go. I didn't do it intentionally."

Tight end Ben Cotton said Pelini's passion is appreciated.

"He wants the best for his team, he wants to win just like we do, he wants to see us succeed," Cotton said. "We all know he's coming from the right intentions, and we've got his back just like he's got ours."

The disparity in penalties between Nebraska and Texas A&M — 16 to 2 — has led to allegations among Husker fans that the Big 12 is conspiring against Nebraska in its last year in the league, before it leaves for the Big Ten.

Asked if he thought that were true, Pelini hesitated, then said he didn't think that was the case.

Pelini was asked how, if he changed roles with officials, he would react to having a coach constantly in his ear. Would he give the offending coach a break?

"Probably not," he said. "When you get animated, you don't approach it the right way. Sometimes you do yourself a disservice. I might have done that the other night. I regret it. I'm sorry about it."

than the Buckeyes.

"I've got respect for them," Robinson said. "But I don't like them."

The feeling is mutual. Ohio State has no other major rival besides Michigan.

But the Wolverines also circle Michigan State and Notre Dame on their calendars each season.

So this is a special week for players and fans to embrace their dislike of the other team.

"I don't hate them, but I don't like them either because of the rivalry," Ohio State cornerback Devon Torrence said. "Michigan is a great university and institution for college and college football. They do a lot in terms of the whole college football spectrum."

"I won't say I hate them — but I really want to beat them."

of the qualitative stats.

"I don't know — I think it was a tossup. I think that it was as close as it can get. I'm not going to go on a limb and say, 'Oh, yeah, I played a heck of a lot better than him because I beat him in batting average, but we all know that batting average is kind of an overrated statistic.'"

The NL Central standings probably were the difference.

"Most importantly, we won," Votto said.

Colorado's Carlos Gonzalez was third with 240 points after winning the NL batting title with a .336 average. San Diego's Adrian Gonzalez (197) was fourth, followed by Colorado's Troy Tulowitzki (132) and Philadelphia pitcher Roy Halladay (130).

Balloting was completed before Votto went 1 for 10 with one RBI and Philadelphia swept the Reds in the first round of the playoffs.

Now 27, Votto didn't become a major league regular until two years ago. Following the death of his father in August 2008, he went on the disabled list and missed 21 games the following year partly because of depression and anxiety.

"I had a really, really difficult time I guess getting over the death of my father," Votto said. "It's still difficult for me sometimes now. It's hard when you lose someone in your life that means so much. It was a difficult 2009 and quite a bit less difficult in 2010, and I think that was definitely a big reason why I was able to stay on the ball-field every day and succeed and make progress and feel better about life."

Raiders DL Seymour fined $25,000

ALAMEDA, Calif. (AP) — A blowout loss to Pittsburgh to end a three-game winning streak was bad enough for the Oakland Raiders.

At least they know they won't be without stalwart defensive tackle Richard Seymour this week following his ejection for hitting Steelers quarterback Ben Roethlisberger in the helmet.

The NFL announced Monday that Seymour would be fined $25,000 for his actions in the second quarter of Oakland's 35-3 loss at Pittsburgh. But there was no suspension.

Coach Tom Cable said before the punishment was announced that Seymour knows he made a poor decision and that his team needs to do a better job maintaining its discipline, even in a physical game like the one Sunday.

"He texted me last night and feels bad about it and knows he was wrong, and we'll move forward," Cable said Monday.

The infraction happened late in the second quarter after Roethlisberger threw a 22-yard touchdown pass to Emmanuel Sanders to give Pittsburgh a 21-3 lead. As Seymour was jawing with some of the Steelers offensive linemen, Roethlisberger ran up and appeared to say something before Seymour hit him with an open hand in the jaw.

Roethlisberger fell to the ground, but was not injured and stayed in the game. Seymour was given a personal foul and was ejected.

"All the offensive linemen, as well as some of us, were getting chippy because they were chipping after the whistle," Oakland linebacker Quentin Groves said. "As Ben goes and tries and break the fight up, Richard reacts. That's just a reaction that a fighter has, and that's what he is, a fighter. To react like that is just a basic combination."

Dontrelle Willis agrees to deal with Reds

CINCINNATI (AP) — Dontrelle Willis has agreed to a minor league deal with the Cincinnati Reds.

Willis won the NL Rookie of the Year award in 2003, helping the Marlins win the World Series that season. He has struggled the last few years, going 13-24 with a 5.81 ERA since the start of the 2007 season.

Willis went 0-2 with Detroit in 2008 and 1-4 in 2009. Detroit traded him to Arizona, and the Diamondbacks designated him for assignment after he went 1-1 with a 6.85 ERA and 27 walks in 22 1-3 innings.

The Giants signed him to a minor league deal in July, but he became a free agent after the season. Willis turns 29 on Jan. 12.

Duke stays No. 1 in AP poll; NC Carolina at 25th

(AP) — Duke is still No. 1 in The Associated Press college basketball poll. North Carolina, The Blue Devils' rival, hung on after two losses at 25th.

Duke has started the season with three wins, and the Blue Devils again received 58 first-place votes from the national media panel on Monday.

Michigan State stayed second but the Spartans lost one of their seven first-place votes. Ohio State and Kansas State, which got the other No. 1 vote, switched places from last week at third and fourth.

Pittsburgh, Kansas, Villanova, Kentucky, Syracuse and Purdue rounded out the Top 10.

North Carolina, which lost two games at the Puerto Rico Tip-Off, dropped from No. 8 to 25th.

Butler and Virginia Tech dropped out from last week, replaced by No. 15 Minnesota and No. 20 Texas.

Coach confident despite 15-20 record at Michigan

ANN ARBOR, Mich. (AP) — There has been plenty of drama in the three seasons at Michigan for Rich Rodriguez.

He says he doesn't want to add fuel to the fire. Rodriguez had a messy divorce from West Virginia three years ago when college football's winningest team lured him away.

Then, he lost a school-record nine games in his Michigan debut, flopped to a 5-7 finish last season and takes a 7-4 record into Saturday's game against rival Ohio State.

The NCAA also determined that the proud program violated major rules — related to practices and workouts — for the first time in its 131-year history under Rodriguez's watch.

Alabama defense braces for Auburn QB Cam Newton

AUBURN, Ala. (AP) — Cam Newton has made quite the impression on Auburn teammate Philip Lutzenkirchen.

Not because of his play, but the way the quarterback has handled allegations that his father, Cecil Netwon, asked for money during this recruitment.

"I'm more proud of him for how he's been handling everything off the field," Lutzenkirchen said Tuesday. "I don't know what that kid's going through. He's just done a good job of maintaining it."

Nearly unstoppable on the field and seemingly unflappable off it, Newton remains the center of attention leading up to Auburn's regular-season finale Friday at No. 9 Alabama.

He hasn't been made available to the media since Nov. 9, and coach Gene Chizik isn't answering questions on the quarterback's off-the-field issues amid allegations that his father sought $180,000 from Mississippi State boosters.

"I'm not talking about Cameron Newton unless it's got something to do with the first 11 games and his performance in those games," Chizik said.

Barring a change in Newton's playing status, the question for Nick Saban & Co. is how to solve the puzzle of trying to defend a 6-foot-6, 250-pound quarterback with nimble feet and an accurate arm.

Being in the right spot doesn't always work.

"Cam usually makes a play out of nothing," Crimson Tide linebacker Dont'a Hightower said. "You would think after he does that there was three guys there, why didn't he make the play?"

Keep him from getting that forward momentum? That's an idea.

"You can't just stop him. You've got to contain him," defensive end Marcell Dareus said. "We've got to keep him east and west. It's pretty hard to do, but we're going to try to do it and buckle down."

At 2-8, Bengals facing a full-scale collapse

CINCINNATI (AP) — Terrell Owens calls his team terrible. And nobody on the Cincinnati Bengals would disagree with the sentiment.

A classic collapse against Buffalo left the defending AFC North champions on the brink of a full-scale meltdown heading into the final six weeks of the season. The Bengals are 2-8 and suddenly in the hunt for the first overall pick in next year's draft.

They're playing so poorly that Owens wouldn't be surprised if their seven-game losing streak keeps on going.

"We may go 2-14 at the rate we're playing," Owens said. "We're not good, period." Any thoughts of a late-season surge were dashed at Paul Brown Stadium on Sunday. The Bengals played their best half of the season on offense, surging ahead 31-14 at halftime. Then, they unraveled in every way, losing 49-31 to a team that had only one win coming in.

GAME

the bottom line for both sides is that they just plain don't like losing to the other guys.

And that's motivation enough.

"To say that they have more at stake than us, when you look at it from bowl perspective and Big Ten championship — sure," Michigan coach Rich Rodriguez said on Monday. "To say it's less important, no. Never."

The Buckeyes enter the storied grudge match needing a win to match the mark of six straight conference titles won by Woody Hayes' Ohio State teams of 1972-77. Heading into the final weekend of conference play, the Buckeyes are in lockstep with Michigan State and Wisconsin, with all three teams 10-1 overall and 6-1 in the Big Ten.

Win, and Ohio State would likely be in the running for a BCS berth — either a return trip to the Rose Bowl, should Wisconsin lose at home to Northwestern, or possibly an at-large bid to the Sugar or Orange bowls.

Lose and the Buckeyes could sag all the way to third in the conference and would end up out of the BCS mix for the first time since 2004.

The Buckeyes are also hoping to add to their mastery of their chief rivals. They've won the last six meetings, their longest string of success ever in the series.

Some fans say that "The Game" has lost some of its luster in recent years because of the Buckeyes' domination. They say that for it to remain a true rivalry, one team can't win every time.

But the alternative is almost unthinkable to Ohio State.

"Already it means so much to us that we don't need to lose a game to remember how bad it hurts," said defensive lineman Dexter Larimore.

Michigan (7-4, 3-4) is heading to a bowl game for the first time in Rodriguez's three years in Ann Arbor. The Wolverines, led by multi-threat quarterback Denard Robinson, are hoping for a victory to prove they've climbed out of the dark hole they were in the past couple of years and are headed for a brighter future.

A signature win couldn't come against anyone better in 2005, 2008 and 2009.

"I tried to keep my head down for almost a year there, and it was nice to speak to somebody who's been there and done that when it comes to everything," Votto said. "For him to give me time of the day and to talk about defensive stuff and ways to improve my game was very generous of him, and he certainly didn't have to do that."

Votto was a first-time All-Star, finishing second in the NL in batting average at .324 and third in homers (37) and RBIs (113). He led the NL in slugging percentage (.600), topped the major leagues in on-base percentage (.424) and had 16 stolen bases in 21 chances. Pujols batted .312 and led the NL in homers (42) and RBIs (118).

"After the season, when I looked at my numbers and at Albert's numbers, I thought: 'Holy cow! He's beaten me in a lot of them,'" Votto said. "He beat me in runs, he beat me in RBIs, home runs, I think a couple others. I beat him in a few

DROP provides windfall to Ohio safety officials

Many Ohioans probably believe they owe decent retirement benefits to those who put their lives on the line in service as police officers and firefighters. But using taxpayers' money to make some public safety officials millionaires is another story entirely.

Police officers and firefighters enrolled in the Ohio Police and Fire Pension Fund can retire with pension benefits relatively early, at 48 years of age, providing they have 25 years of service. Some may choose to stay on the job, at which point they become eligible for the Deferred Retirement Option Plan, or DROP.

DROP participants agree to work at least three more years, but no more than eight. During that time, while they continue collecting salaries, the state program also is making pension payments to them. The money goes into special accounts earning 5 percent interest a year. Recipients also receive automatic 3 percent cost-of-living increases annually. Once enrollees actually do retire, they collect money out of the special fund in a lump sum.

For many police officers and firefighters, DROP merely pads their retirement a bit. But for higher-ranking public safety officials, the program can be a gigantic windfall. Some of them can collect more than $1 million in lump sum payments on retiring, according to the Buckeye Institute for Public Policy Solutions.

Yes, $1 million. As the institute put it in a report, that is a retirement "Dipped in Gold."

It is understandable that some local governments may want to retain experienced public safety officials past age 48. But paying for the privilege by making the officials retirement millionaires is asking too much of taxpayers.

Governor-elect John Kasich and Ohio legislators have their work cut out for them in reforming state government. We suggest a good first step would be to drop DROP's lavish benefits scheme.

Why Sarah shouldn't run

MONA CHAREN

By telling Barbara Walters that she thinks she can defeat President Obama, Sarah Palin has dimmed hopes cherished by sensible Republicans that she might decide against a run for the White House in 2012. Here are just some of the reasons she should not run.

The Republican nominee should be someone with vast and impressive experience in government and the private sector — and a proven record. Voters chose a novice with plenty of star power in 2008 and will be inclined to swing strongly in the other direction in 2012. Americans will be looking for sober competence, managerial skill, and maturity, not sizzle and flash.

After the 2008 campaign revealed her weaknesses on substance, Palin was advised by those who admire her natural gifts to bone up on policy and devote herself to governing Alaska successfully. Instead, she quit her job as governor after two and a half years, published a book (another is due next week), and seemed to chase money and empty celebrity. Now, rather than being able to highlight the accomplishments of Sarah Palin's Alaska, we get "Sarah Palin's Alaska," another cheesy entrant in the reality show genre. She'd so much rather be out dog sledding than in some "dull political office," she tells the audience. File that.

She is wildly popular with a swath of the Republican electorate, it's true. And, as a conservative woman politician told me, the consultants (who get paid the big bucks win or lose) will doubtless descend upon her with game plans showing how she can win in Iowa and then cruise to the nomination. Maybe. But the general election would be a problem, since 53 percent of independent voters view Palin unfavorably, according to a recent Gallup poll, along with 81 percent of Democrats.

There is no denying that Sarah Palin has been harshly, sometimes even brutally treated by the press and the news/entertainment gaggle. But any prominent Republican must expect some of that and be able to transcend it. She compares herself to Reagan. But Reagan didn't mud wrestle with the press. Palin seems consumed and obsessed by it, as her rapid Twitter finger attests, and thus encourages the sniping. She should be presiding over meetings on oil and gas leases in the North Slope, or devising alternatives to Obamacare. Every public spat with Dave Letterman or Politico, or the "lamestream media," or God help us, Levi Johnston, diminishes her.

Speaking of television, sorry, this must be mentioned. Have you watched "Dancing With the Stars"? Cheesy would be several steps up for this one. Perhaps the former governor should not be blamed for the decisions of her adult daughter. Yet there in the audience we see Sarah and Todd Palin, mugging for the camera and cheering on their unwed-mother daughter as she bumps and grinds to the tune of "Mamma Told Me (Not to Come)." Her parents had advised her, the 20-year-old Bristol told an interviewer, that she had to stay "in character" if she expected to win. Being "in character" apparently meant descending to the vulgarity that "DWTS" peddles on a weekly basis. The momma grizzly was apparently unfazed by — or, equally disturbing, unaware of — the indignity. And this is supposed to be a conservative culture warrior?

Judgment, above all, is what voters prize in a presidential candidate. Some of Sarah Palin's 2010 endorsements were sound and arguably helpful. Others betrayed flightiness and recklessness. Tom Tancredo, Palin's choice for governor of Colorado, has ridden his anti-immigration hobbyhorse in a style perfectly suited to alienate Hispanic voters (describing Miami, for example, as a "Third World city"). The endorsement of Christine O'Donnell was irresponsible and damaging, losing a seat that would certainly have been a Republican pickup absent Palin's intrusion into the race. It goes without saying that O'Donnell received an absurdly disproportionate amount of ink and attention during the race (the liberal press naturally seizes upon any opportunity to make conservatives look kooky), but again, Palin should have anticipated that. Besides, this one cannot be laid at the feet of the biased media. O'Donnell was a thoroughly unqualified candidate.

Palin has many strengths. I admire her fortitude and her commitment to principle. Her capacity to connect with a crowd is something most politicians can only dream of. I will always remember her 2008 convention speech as a rollicking star turn. She would be terrific as a talk-show host — the new Oprah.

But as a presidential candidate? Someone to convince critical independent voters that Republicans can govern successfully? Absolutely not.

Ray LaHood: Obama's power-mad cell phone czar

MICHELLE MALKIN

America is in debt past its eyeballs. Unemployment remains stuck near double digits. Small and large businesses, unions and insurers are clamoring for Obamacare waivers in droves. Jihadists are making a mockery of homeland security.

And border chaos reigns. So, what's one of the Obama administration's top domestic policy agenda items this month? Combating distracted drivers.

What? You missed the Million Anti-Distracted Drivers Protest March on Washington and the Great Grassroots Groundswell for federal intervention on our highways and byways? Don't worry. You weren't the only one.

Making the cable TV rounds to unveil a public service announcement campaign against "epidemic" cell phone use and texting on the road, Transportation Secretary Ray LaHood revealed bizarre and alarming plans on Wednesday to install devices in cars that would block a driver's ability to communicate.

"There's a lot of technology out there now that can disable phones, and we're looking at that," he threatened. LaHood — a liberal Republican and pork-addicted Chicago crony who embodies Obama "bipartisanship" — envisions centralized government mechanisms to shut off commuters' BlackBerries and iPhones.

And that's just the start. "We need to do a lot more if we're going to save lives," LaHood vowed, while paying obligatory lip service to encouraging "personal responsibility." Will the cell phone banners ban radios, GPS devices, makeup and fast food in cars next? All are also listed as causes of distracted driver-induced accidents.

Any death due to such reckless behavior is tragic. But by "saving lives," what cell phone czar LaHood really means is "controlling lives." There are already 30 states with laws in place regulating drivers' cell phone and/or texting habits. The District of Columbia and Guam also passed bans. The safety benefits of such laws are in dispute.

The Insurance Institute for Highway Safety examined insurance claims and driving habits in Louisiana, Washington, Minnesota and California, which all passed texting bans two years ago. Its study found that when compared to neighboring states that had not yet banned texting while driving (Arkansas, Texas and Mississippi), the no-texting states actually reported higher accident rates among young drivers — while the states with no bans maintained constant accident rates.

Safety officials theorized that drivers in no-texting states may have adjusted their habits to hide their cell phone use from visual detection by police — incentivizing even riskier behavior.

□ LaHood and his fellow social meddlers have lashed out at the study and any other evidence that state enforcement of these bans is futile. But there's a long history of government safety regulations backfiring on central planners.

Back in the 1970s, the federal drive to require child safety-caps on aspirin bottles resulted in no reduction in child poisoning deaths. In fact, renowned risk analyst Kip Viscusi at Harvard Law School found that the regulations induced many parents to leave the caps off altogether because they were inconvenient and difficult to remove.

□ Moreover, the push for federal policing of our driving habits comes just as the federal government itself reports that the rate of teenage-related car accidents has fallen.

Yes, fallen. Despite increased cell phone use, the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) shows that when the years 2004 through 2008 were compared, there was a 38 percent reduction in the number of car accidents involving 16 and 17 year olds.

So what's really driving LaHood? He's pursued an anti-car ideological zeal from Day One — from entertaining proposals to impose mileage taxes on drivers and to track drivers' routes, to redistributing tax dollars to pie-in-the-sky high-rail projects that no private business will touch, to peddling a "livability initiative" that would discourage suburban growth and corral residents in high-density areas dependent on public transportation.

Like the rest of Obama's radicals, the Transportation Department's self-appointed cell phone czar is a power-hungry busybody hiding behind children to expand government's reach. If only federal agencies came equipped with anti-big government ignition breathalyzer locks.

Rivers throws 4 TD passes in 35-14 Chargers win

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Philip Rivers tied his career high with four touchdown passes and the San Diego Chargers beat the Denver Broncos 35-14 on Monday night for their third straight victory. While Rivers did it on a season-low 233 yards, San Diego's defense, led by linebacker Shaun Phillips, settled in and harassed Denver's Kyle Orton after he led an easy opening scoring drive.

Patrick Crayton scored on a 40-yard catch-and-run late in the second quarter, hurting his left wrist as he fell into the end zone, and speedy little Darren Sproles had a 57-yard catch-and-run early in the third.

The four-time defending AFC West champion Chargers (5-5) even pulled off a fake punt, a remarkable accomplishment considering the special teams gaffes that contributed to a 2-5 start.

► OSU NOTES

Tressel pleased with tribute to '42 team
 COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — What's brewing with the 2010 Ohio State Buckeyes...
BUCKEYES BUZZ: Ohio State will sport new Nike uniforms for Saturday's game at home (noon kickoff) against rival Michigan. There's a small U.S. flag on the right sleeve, plus other marks and logos which honor the 1942 Buckeyes team of coach Paul Brown that went 9-1 and won the national championship.
 Coach Jim Tressel is a big fan of the tribute uniform.
 "We're looking forward to the fact that we're honoring that 1942 team, which one could argue that that's when a great part of our tradition began in Ohio State football," he said on Monday. "Not to mention the fact that what those men did once the season was over, they went and served in the ultimate way, and we even lost a couple members of that team in the war. So you put all those things together, I don't know if you could make the Ohio State-Michigan game any more special. But I think when you mention that football team and what they mean to our program and what they meant to our country, it just adds a little bit more."
 NO PRYOR: QB Terrelle Pryor was not made available to talk about the upcoming game during Ohio State's media day on Monday. After the Iowa victory last Saturday night, Pryor or someone using his Twitter account sent disparaging messages about former Ohio State QB and current ESPN college football analyst Kirk Herbstreit, and also angrily wrote that all of the "haters" out there weren't good enough to even wear his shoes. There was no comment from Ohio State about the tweets.
THE WEEK THAT WAS: Each week the Ohio State football coaching staff selects its players of the week based on the previous game, in this case Saturday's 20-17 win at Iowa. The offensive player of the week was Pryor, LB Brian Rolle was singled out on defense and K Devin Barclay won on special teams. Mike Adams was named as the OL of the week. John Simon the top front-seven defender and S Jermale Hines had the hit of the week.

Honored on scout teams: TB Rod Smith (offense), DL Darryl Baldwin (defense) and DB Julian Vann (special units).
ON A ROLL: In a season in which few Buckeyes won conference awards, Rolle also took the Big Ten's defensive player of the week honors.
 The senior from Immokalee, Fla., had 10 tackles, including a career-high three tackles for loss, in the win at Iowa. Rolle pushed the Hawkeyes offense back 12 yards on his three tackles for loss, and four of his 10 tackles were solo stops. Iowa entered the game averaging 30.8 points, 405.9 yards of total offense and 153.2 rushing yards per game. Rolle was part of a defensive effort that limited the Hawkeyes to only 17 points, 276 yards of total offense and 81 yards on the ground.
 Joining him on the conference honor roll were: — Illinois RB Mikel Leshoure, who set a school record with 330 rushing yards on 33 carries with a pair of touchdowns against Northwestern. The junior averaged 10 yards per carry, including a 70-yard sprint in the first quarter and a 62-yard run in the fourth quarter. His 330-yard effort broke the program record of 315 yards set by Robert Holcombe at Minnesota on Nov. 16, 1996. Leshoure's day ranks fifth in Big Ten history and marks the conference's first game of 330 or more yards since Wisconsin's Ron Dayne compiled 339 yards at Hawaii on Nov. 30, 1996. The 330-yard game is also the highest total by any Football Bowl Subdivision player in over two seasons.

The special-teams honorees were both from Ohio.
 Hamilton native and Michigan State freshman LB Denicos Allen blocked a punt to help the Spartans rally from a 15-point fourth-quarter deficit for a victory against Purdue. Trailing 28-13 entering the final period, the Spartans scored a pair of touchdowns to pull within 31-28. With just over five minutes left in the game, Allen blocked a punt which was recovered by teammate Johnny Adams at the Purdue 3. Two plays later, QB Kirk Cousins scrambled three yards for the game-winning touchdown.
 Penn State junior S Andrew Dailey, from Massillon, blocked an Indiana punt with the score tied in the fourth quarter. The block was scooped up by teammate James Van Fleet and returned 21 yards for a touchdown to give Penn State a 31-24 lead. The Nittany Lions would add another score to end the game with a 41-24 victory. The junior safety has now blocked two punts in his career.
QUOTE OF THE DAY: Michigan DE Ryan Van Bergen on what he was doing the last time the Wolverines beat Ohio State: "I would've been 14, that's when I was in eighth grade — probably busy chasing girls or playing basketball."
LOSE THE BLUE: Now in its fifth year, the "Lose the Blue" clothing drive, headed by the Ohio State's athletic and licensing departments, has collected more than 18,000 pounds of clothing for Goodwill Columbus. Last year, the initiative gathered more than 4,000 pounds.
 This year, fans can donate gently used items of blue clothing at the Ohio State team shop or at several other merchandise outlets throughout the city. With a donation of a blue item combined with a minimum purchase of $10, fans will receive a free "Beat Blue" Rah Rag.
 Fans can bring clothing to the three men's and women's home basketball games this week, also.

Motion to dismiss in criminal case denied

By MARY ANN GREIER

Staff Writer

LISBON — A judge has rejected a West Virginia man's argument to have his case dismissed because his right to a speedy trial under the rules for prisoners from other states was violated.

Judge C. Ashley Pike of Columbiana County Common Pleas Court issued the ruling Friday, siding with the state's argument against the defendant's motion to dismiss.

Brandon Dunn, 26, of Chester, had been charged in 2008 with receiving stolen property after he was allegedly caught in East Liverpool in possession of a Hyundai Elantra owned by Kaitlyn Evans which was reported stolen from Hancock County in West Virginia.

He wasn't served with the indictment until sometime this year because he's been serving a 12-year sentence in West Virginia since November 2008 for robbery and grand larceny.

In April, he sent a request asking for final disposition on the receiving stolen property indictment through what's called Interstate Agreement on Detainers.

The agreement allows a prisoner to be taken into temporary custody by the county in question so the prisoner can face trial for the pending charge and take care of the situation.

In this case, his attorney, Kelly Linger, filed a motion to dismiss on Oct. 28, claiming the state of Ohio had violated the terms of the Interstate Agreement on Detainers on two different fronts.

On one front, she said he should have been brought to trial within 180 days of him making the request, which she calculated at Oct. 19.

She also argued that on the term dealing with his arrival in the county, he should have been brought to trial within 120 days of his arrival, with that deadline falling on Oct. 13. She also noted no continuances had been granted in the case.

The county prosecutor's office argued that no violations occurred, noting that because the prisoner was the one who initiated returning to the state to face charges, the 120-day window for bringing him to trial once he arrives doesn't apply.

As for the 180-day requirement, the prosecution admitted that term does apply, but in this case, there were actions by the defendant which stopped the clock so to speak so that certain time periods don't count toward the 180 days.

The prosecution claimed the time period from when the defendant requested discovery and the state complied with the request does not count.

Since the defendant has never answered the state's request for reciprocal discovery, the time is still tolled, or stopped. By the state's calculations, when the trial date of Nov. 2 came and went, 89 days remained to try the case.

The prosecution also pointed out that defense counsel agreed to a trial date on Nov. 2, a Pike overruled the motion to dismiss, noting he agreed with the state's interpretation. A status hearing has been set for Dec. 6.

Moody's

Moody's said, "While it is favorable to see that the city is projecting operating surpluses for fiscal years 2010 and 2011, cash reserves are expected to continue to remain narrow, giving the city (a) limited financial cushion in the case of unexpected budgetary variances.

"Additionally, the city has in the past few years allocated a larger portion of the income receipts towards the general fund to prevent structural imbalances, with a current mix of 85 percent of income tax receipts going to the general fund and 15 percent to capital improvements and debt retirement."

Moody's said that has resulted in deferred capital projects and without a "an immediate plan" to build reserves to satisfactory levels, the continued fiscal climates and the city's reliance on income taxes, "we expect the city's financial operations will remain narrowed in the near future."

The report tied Salem to Youngstown, noting it "will face a slow economic recovery due to the area's continued dependence on industrial manufacturing."

It called Salem's debt "modest" while pointing out the city has historically financed the majority of its capital expenditures internally ... but future debt "issues may be necessary to maintain adequate cash in city funds."

It added, "The city has no immediate plans to issue debt, though (it) may finance water and sewer improvements over the near to medium term."

"Principal amortization is average, with 72 percent of the principle retired within 10 years. All the city's debt is (at a) fixed rate, and there is no exposure to derivatives or swap agreements."

Armeni said Moody's is interested in two things: what are you doing to raise revenue; and, what are you doing to cut or contain debt, or both.

He said Salem maintained an A-1 and A-2 rating from 1996 to 2004.

"In a couple of years they could take another look," he said. "Maybe they'll go back and upgrade the rating ... hopefully through the years we get that rating back with planning and cost containment. This shows we are part of the global economy."

When they arrived, the wife said he had been taken to a hospital because he was passing blood in his urine. She said he had been highly intoxicated, started arguing with her and became agitated when she took a beer off of him. — A Lisbon woman on Mattix Road reported at 9:21 a.m. Friday that her husband found a tree stand built on their property, along with finding a small tent. She said they have no trespassing signs posted and no one was to be hunting on the property. She was told to remove the tent and call if they find someone on the property.

— The Sheriff's Office was investigating a food fight at Southern Local High School Thursday which apparently left some ceiling tile damaged and resulted in two girls being suspended for 10 days, with expulsion hearings pending. The report said Principal Carol Vollnogle told deputies they wanted to file criminal charges against the two students for vandalism and wanted restitution for the damaged tiles at a cost of $80 each. The report did not say how many tiles were damaged. The two students, a 15-year-old and a 16-year-old, both said they were hit by food and started throwing it back at the table in question. They said other students were also throwing food.

Woman challenging request denial

LISBON — An East Liverpool woman filed legal action Friday to challenge the denial of her request to place a modular home closer to the road than the required minimum setback distance.

Shirley Little, of 14 Eutaw St., filed the administrative appeal in Columbiana County Common Pleas Court to challenge the Oct. 20 decision of the East Liverpool Board of Zoning Appeals to deny her variance request.

The court document said the appeal questioned both law and fact, dealing reconstruction of a dwelling on her property and making a certain use discontinued.

A previous published report said she had planned to install a modular home at 16 Eutaw Street. The board had asked her to combine the two lots and place the house so it met the required setback distances.

Woman gets new trial after witness 'lied'

COLUMBUS (AP) — A judge granted a new trial for an Ohio woman convicted of killing her husband more than 20 years ago because a toxicologist lied about his qualifications when he testified in her case.

A court document filed Monday in Licking County says Virginia LeFever, 59, deserves a new trial because of veteran toxicologist James Ferguson's flawed testimony.

"Is it fair to let a verdict stand when it is based in large part on the testimony of a proven liar?" Judge Mark Wiest wrote. Ferguson, who worked for the Franklin County coroner for more than two decades, testified in trials in central Ohio, including LeFever's murder trial in neighboring Licking County in 1990. He testified in her trial that he graduated from Ohio State University in 1972, but court documents and a university transcript show he graduated 16 years later. Ferguson pleaded no contest to falsification and spent 30 days in jail this summer. He didn't return a message left Monday, but he has acknowledged in court that he misrepresented the year he graduated.

"With regard to my expertise, I had twenty years of education, training and experience before the testimony in the year 1990 and I continued for another twenty years, until I retired," he said, according to a court transcript. "As to the charge, I did misrepresent the year that I graduated." A court found LeFever guilty of aggravated murder in 1990 and sentenced her to life in prison after hearing testimony from Ferguson, who was named as "the key witness to the State's case."

Riesen

at Camp Pendleton, Calif.

Court documents said he attempted to enter the base with the intent to commit a crime.

A 1996 West Branch High School graduate who had resided on Buck Road in Alliance, Riesen was charged with interstate transportation of a firearm and ammunition with the intent to commit a felony and unauthorized possession of a firearm on a federal facility with the intent to use it in the commission of a crime.

The charges were filed by the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms and he has been held since. The first charge was dropped.

Court documents said that from July 2-4, Riesen, who has lived in Wyoming but had no address at the time, made numerous phone calls to the base claiming a Combat Action Ribbon and certain veteran's benefits were not received.

He allegedly made threats and warned that he would travel to the base and cause an unspecified "havoc" if his requests were not granted.

According to a report from a Marine Corps officer posted on the Fire & Ice Web site, after his arrest, Riesen revealed to federal agents a detailed plan to go on a shooting spree at the base.

The Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms said he arrived at Camp Pendleton and was stopped at a gate where he was unable to produce his driver's license, saying it had been lost.

A "be on the look out" (BOLO) had been issued for him based on previous calls he made to the base.

Court records said Riesen explained to the gate guard that he traveled from Las Vegas and came to the base to visit a "friend" in the 5th Marine Division and he then was instructed to pull into a secondary screening area for questioning.

There, a Marine observed an open box for a .45 caliber pistol on the front seat and Riesen was told to exit the vehicle and was detained.

The report alleged he threatened to kill everyone and their families, attempted to resist arrest, acted out "in a ferocious rage" and indicated he wanted to go to his old unit 3/5 area, and straighten things out his way.

It said he identified two officers with the 5th Marines as being responsible for him not receiving a Combat Action Ribbon.

He was taken under heavy guard to the Naval hospital for medical evaluation and booked by the ATF into the San Diego Central Jail after a search of his vehicle revealed five firearms and hundreds of rounds of ammunition and other weapons.

HOROSCOPE

By HOLIDAY MATHIS
11/23/10

The Sagittarius sun throws a log onto the emotional fire. Smoldering, tortured passions become action adventures. "Doing" is not always better than "thinking about doing." However, "not doing" under the Sagittarius sun is extremely difficult. We see opportunity for fun and fortune, and we feel compelled to move forward.

ARIES (March 21-April 19). Confidence imprints in a very positive way on what you do, as long as you do what you know is correct, right and true. Being confident in an area you know little about, however, could get you into trouble.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20). You have toughened up in some respect, and that's why you are permitted to move into more competitive arenas. The stakes will be raised, and you're ready for this new game.

GEMINI (May 21-June 21). Your choices will be affected by the flow of traffic you meet at the intersection. Try to anticipate what others want, but keep in mind what you want, too. Be mindful of the rules, and all will cross safely.

CANCER (June 22-July 22). You have a challenge ahead of you today. The trick is for you not to worry about what anybody else would do. This is about you and your creative choices. Believe in yourself.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22). You can read about a job, but what really counts will be getting in there and experiencing it firsthand. That's why volunteering to work for free may be better than paying for special schooling.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22). Business gets off to an energetic start. In order to keep up the production level, you'll need to find a way to keep things fresh. Take a break midway through the day, or add a new player to the mix.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23). Take time for doing what you like to do. Following your interests will lead to new connections. You'll meet a friend and/or potential love match while pursuing a hobby, playing sports or helping with a political cause.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 21). Though you might start the day feeling on edge or even snippy, you will quickly see the benefit of trading in your attitude for gratitude. Good things happen because you approach your daily routine with loving thoughts.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21). It is someone's job to make you believe you need something that you, in fact, do not need now and never will. Make it a rule not to fix things that are not broken.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19). Love is without conditions. The one who keeps trying to manipulate you emotionally by threatening to take away the love they give is not giving true love in the first place.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18). You cannot try for the score without taking a risk. As you run for the goal, you are out in the open and, to some degree, defenseless. That's why you need supportive and encouraging people around you.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20). Tell people what you're up to. There are unexpected helpers only a few connections away, though they will never get the opportunity to help if they don't know what you need.

TODAY'S BIRTHDAY (Nov. 23). You do way more than your fair share and will be financially rewarded for your extra effort. Family makes you proud in the next 10 weeks. You'll be celebrated for your many talents in January. Relationships go from being platonic to romantic to platonic to romantic ... and on and on. June and October are perfect for travel. Scorpio and Libra people adore you. Your lucky numbers are: 40, 2, 11, 39 and 32.

Exit strategy for beggars

Heloise

Dear Heloise: During the past month, when I'm leaving the grocery store, I have encountered people waiting outside the exit door ASKING FOR MONEY.

I used to keep my change in my hand as I left the store. After being hounded by many people for money, I now make sure I put my change in my pocketbook and zip it up.

You never know what someone might do in a desperate situation. I also went back in the store to tell the manager about what was going on outside. — Milissa Deane in New York

Always trust your instincts when it comes to your safety! It's wise to be aware of your surroundings and other people, and NOT show a lot of money, whether in a store or in another situation. — Heloise

WASTED WALLET

Dear Heloise: I recently lost my wallet. You know what's next: Cancel all credit cards! Well, that was the easy part. I had a driver's license, photos, insurance cards, etc. I could not tell you exactly what was in there. So, the hint is: Write up an inventory of your wallet and e-mail it to yourself. It will make a bad situation a little better. — Shawn, via e-mail

SAVING MONEY

Dear Heloise: Hate to throw out things that you still can get mileage out of? If you have those wet wipes that have dried out, if they are in a plastic container, just add water and they are good to go again. If you have lipstick you hate to throw out because you love the color, just use a cotton swab to dig down into the tube and then apply. You will be amazed by how much lipstick is still down there. — Peg Garrick in Kenilworth, N.J.

QUICK FIX

Dear Heloise: My husband has found a solution for those round shoelaces that keep untying themselves every hour when you walk! He paints them with rubber cement.

They stay pliable, but the surface remains rough, and the laces stay tied all day. After six months, they may need another bath, but that beats retying constantly. — Delores Gustafson in Colorado Springs, Colo.

Outgoing wives learn to live with homebodies

DEAR ABBY: I am writing about the letter from "Socially Obligated in Pennsylvania" (Oct. 4), whose fiance, "Joe," refuses invitations to events from her family. My niece married a well-educated man who is like Joe. They now live an isolated social life and participate in none of the normal family functions that are so important in bringing people together. Their children miss so much.

My advice to "S.O." would be to rethink the engagement and consider meeting someone who is more socially compatible and less controlling. Marriage is a partnership built on compromise. Joe is uncooperative. My second husband was like this man. I divorced him. Family meant too much to me. — OLDER AND WISER IN ARIZONA

DEAR OLDER: Thank you for your comments. I heard from many readers who were eager to share what they have learned from living with someone who is uncomfortable in social situations. Read on:

DEAR ABBY: "Socially Obligated" and her fiance need counseling to find answers to why he is reluctant to attend her family functions. Is he introverted? Does he suffer from Asperger's syndrome and is unable to feel comfortable in crowds? Could he be depressed? Could there have been an issue that has turned him off to her family?

After seven years together, they need to dig deeper or it will continue to be a problem. — LOUISE IN DAYTON, OHIO

DEAR ABBY: I, too, am married to a man who refuses to do anything with me if anyone else is involved, whether it be church, family or work. He is comfortable with me, and that's it! We will do things from time to time with family, but he despises it. I feel it's unfair, because I go out of my way to include his relatives in my life. But I knew this about him before we were married. I have quit making excuses for him and now just explain that he is extremely uncomfortable around people. He has social anxiety and will not likely change. I love him in spite of it, and I make adjustments. One way I cope is by latching onto someone else in the group so I don't feel left out among the couples present. I engage with nieces and nephews and my widowed mother. I advise "S.O." to love the man for who he is. Don't try to force him or put him down. — MAKING IT WORK IN THE MIDWEST

DEAR ABBY: There could be other explanations for the man's social avoidance. My wife is more social than I. I used to go with her to events that she wanted me to attend. But I noticed that afterward, I would get chewed out — I talked too much or too little, spoke too loudly or couldn't be heard, mixed too much or not enough. In other words, my wife was so socially insecure that no matter how I acted, she took issue. I finally realized that the problem was hers and not mine. I haven't gone anywhere socially with my wife since 1995 and it has worked out just fine. — STEPHEN IN KENTUCKY

DEAR ABBY: I come from a large, boisterous, affectionate Italian-Catholic family. My husband grew up an only child in a conservative home. My family gatherings so overwhelmed him that he could only attend one or two per year. I attended the rest alone. We had many heated arguments about his dislike of my family — until my mother became ill and he watched how we all came together for her care. That's when he came to know and appreciate my family on a different level. Perhaps over time "S.O.'s" fiance will, too. — MONICA IN SAN CLEMENTE, CALIF.

Clot in lung can be suddenly deadly

Dr. Donohue

DEAR DR. DONOHUE: To celebrate their 50th wedding anniversary, my mother and father took a trip to Hawaii. They live on the East Coast, so this involved lots of time on an airplane. My father died on the plane before they landed in Hawaii. My mother thought he was sleeping until it was time to deplane. An autopsy showed a pulmonary embolism. My mother blames herself for his death, because she pushed this trip. Can you explain his cause of death to my mother so she can get over her guilt? — M.S.

ANSWER: A pulmonary embolus is a blood clot in a lung. Most of the time, the clot forms in the legs and is carried to the lungs through the circulation. A large pulmonary embolus often is deadly. People do survive smaller ones.

Blood that's circulating sluggishly tends to clot. Long trips in a car, bus or plane force people to stay seated for hours on end. Not moving around traps blood in leg veins, and a clot forms. Your father had no warning that this was happening. A piece of that leg clot — an embolus — was swept into his lungs. Your mother had no role in this. It could have happened to your dad when he was taking a car trip some miles from his home. It happens to bedridden people even in the hospital. Most hospitals now have programs that make patients confined to bed move their legs often. They give patients compression hose to keep blood from stagnating in the legs. All those who take long trips should get up and walk about as frequently as possible.

Your mother bears no responsibility for your dad's death. It was an unfortunate event over which neither she nor your dad had any control. I understand her grief and shock at losing her partner of 50 years so unexpectedly.

DEAR DR. DONOHUE: During my annual exam I always have an EKG. They've all been normal. This year the doctor tells me I have a left bundle branch block. He says I don't need to do anything or take any medicine. This has made me a little edgy. My father died of a heart attack at age 49. I'm in my 70s, and I'd like to live much longer. What can you tell me about left bundle branch block? — R.J.

ANSWER: All hearts have a pacemaker, a little island of special cells that send out a blip of electricity. Two cables, much like electric wires, conduct that electrical blip to the lower chamber of the heart — the right and left ventricles. Each is served by its own cable, right and left. When the signal reaches the ventricles, they contract and pump blood.

Your left bundle is on the blink. It implies that there is some kind of heart problem. The heart arteries might be clogging a bit. At age 50, 0.4 percent of the population has a left bundle branch block. At age 80, 15 times that number have one.

Your heart still pumps normally. The electrical impulse reaches the left ventricle by taking a detour. You can do nothing on your own to correct the situation. You can do things that improve your heart's health — watch your weight, control your blood pressure, exercise, don't smoke and keep your cholesterol in the normal range. You should stay as active as your doctor permits. It is his job to watch you and detect any suggestion of advancing heart disease. A left bundle branch block can lead to more serious problems in the transmission of the electric signal from the pacemaker. For the present, you don't need to do anything more.

Clingy Colette has eyes for her husband

Annie's Mailbox

Dear Annie: My husband and I regularly go camping with several other couples. There is usually drinking going on throughout the day.

or just let it roll? — Wondering Wife

The wife of one of the other couples seems to pay a great deal of attention to my husband. Recently, we were sitting on the sand together, and "Colette" sat down in front of me and, ahem, lost her balance. She put her hand on my husband's thigh to steady herself and left it there for approximately an hour. Colette hangs around him a lot and is clingy. When I mentioned her behavior to my husband, he said I was overreacting and that she was just drunk. He claims she is the touchy-feely sort with everyone. But I don't see her doing it with anyone else. I think Colette is crossing the line, and it's causing some problems between my husband and me. Should I be concerned

Dear Wondering: Drinking lowers inhibitions, but it doesn't mean Colette isn't aware of her flirting. And your husband probably enjoys it. He should put a stop to it, but since he apparently has no intention of doing so, you could take a more proactive stance.

If Colette trips and falls

Plant smoke sends seven to hospital

FINDLAY, Ohio (AP) — Authorities say seven people were taken to a hospital with respiratory problems after molten aluminum overflowed and created smoke at a brake plant in northwest Ohio.

Fire Chief Thomas Lonyo says about 18 others were evaluated Monday morning at the Nissin Brake Ohio Inc. plant in Findlay.

The Courier newspaper reports that the employees were taken to Blanchard Valley Hospital. A message seeking their conditions was left at the hospital.

Plant spokesman Wilson Schroeder says the employees were taken to the hospital as a precaution.

Schroeder says a small amount of molten aluminum created the smoke after it overflowed onto hydraulic and electrical lines in the plant foundry.

Findlay is about 45 miles south of Toledo.

Giraffe at Cincinnati zoo found dead

CINCINNATI (AP) — Cincinnati zoo officials are waiting to find out what caused the weekend death of a 3-year-old giraffe.

Keepers found the female Massai giraffe named Akilah on Saturday evening sitting in the back of an outdoor exhibit. She apparently was feeding on the grass inside an enclosed island in the exhibit when her horns became caught in the netting surrounding the trees.

A necropsy was being performed Sunday to find out what caused the giraffe's death. Officials say results could take days, if not weeks.

Cincinnati Zoo & Botanical Garden staff planned to remove the netting around the trees before the zoo's other two giraffes go on exhibit.

Twelve-foot-tall Akilah was born in 2006 at the Toledo Zoo. She has been at the Cincinnati zoo since June 2008.

Housing Court: big fines, little paid

CLEVELAND (AP) — Only a tiny fraction of the landlord fines imposed in Cleveland Housing Court since last year for rundown homes have been paid.

The Plain Dealer reports that less than $10,000 of the $20 million in fines in the past 17 months has been paid.

Judge Raymond Pianka, whose get-tough policy on landlords includes daily contempt fines, says he was shocked to learn of the low collection rate.

A Housing Court lawyer who has handled collections says it can take years to collect fines, especially from out-of-state landlords.

Reward now $10,000 in arson that killed 3

COLUMBUS (AP) — A reward has been increased to $10,000 for information on an Ohio fire that killed three people, including a baby.

President Kevin Miles of the group Crime Stoppers tells The Columbus Dispatch an anonymous donor agreed to put up $3,000 on top of the $7,000 already offered.

The Oct. 15 house fire in a poor neighborhood near downtown Columbus killed a 61-year-old woman, her 20-year-old grandson and a 7-month-old girl the woman was caring for.

Homicide Detective Patricia Dailey says police have received details about a possible motive.

She says a general belief is that the person who set the fire did not act alone.

Arson investigators say the fire was set on a front porch and swept through the two-story home.

Schools offer parents advice after tragedy

MOUNT VERNON, Ohio (AP) — A central Ohio school district will offer parents advice on helping classmates cope with the kidnapping of one student and the killing of her brother.

Thirteen-year-old Sarah Maynard was found bound and gagged in a basement in Mount Vernon over a week ago. The home's resident, Matthew Hoffman, was arrested on a kidnapping charge, and police say he later told them how to find the bodies of 11-year-old Kody Maynard, the children's mother and another woman.

The dismembered remains were discovered Thursday in trash bags stuffed inside a hollow tree.

The East Knox school district has scheduled what's described as a "parent education meeting" for Monday evening to provide tips on how to help and support middle school classmates of Sarah and Kody.

AAA: Gas falls 11 cents to average $2.79

COLUMBUS (AP) — Prices at Ohio gas pumps have fallen 11 cents going into one of the busiest travel weeks of the year.

A survey from auto club AAA, the Oil Price Information Service and Wright Express shows Ohio's average price for regular-grade gasoline has gone down to $2.79 a gallon, from $2.90 last Monday.

Nationwide, rising oil prices, a seasonal drop in refinery output and a weaker dollar had all contributed to a 5-cent increase in retail gas prices in the past month. Ohio's average hit a two-year high earlier this month.

Ahead of Thanksgiving last year, the state's motorists paid a lower $2.61 per gallon for regular, on average.

Damascus students celebrate Thanksgiving

Damascus Elementary enjoyed Thanksgiving turkey dinner last Thursday. The students went over the river and through the woods to grandpa's house was the theme in which the P.I.E. decorated the cafeteria for this special dinner. There was also students who performed for their classmates. Along with the students getting into the spirit they dressed up as the first Thanksgiving dinner with Pilgrims, Indians and turkeys. Shown above, from left, second graders Joseph Muniz and Belle Francis; first grader Paige Derry; and, kindergartender Haley Hazelbaker. (Submitted photo)

It's still hard as always, this absence we endure. Unsaid, but not forgotten.

I thought of you with love today, but that is nothing new. I thought about you yesterday and days before that too. I think of you in silence, I often speak your name. All I have are memories and your picture in a frame. Your memory is my keepsake, with which I'll never part. God has you in His keeping, I have you in my heart.

Love you forever,
Linda, Tim, David, Deanna, Leanna, Debbie, Morgan and Sadie Grace
