Salem schools tighten access

By MARY ANN GREIER
Staff Writer

SALEM — Salem school officials unveiled a new security measure Thursday, restricting student access into the high school/junior high building to two doors each morning.

“A lot of students were caught off guard,” Superintendent Tom Bratten told board members Thursday night, but he added it’s worth some inconvenience.

The move is part of the district’s ongoing effort to improve security and look at what can be done to keep students safe, something he said they’re constantly updating.

The idea to try to control the flow into the building in the mornings when students arrive came out of a meeting Wednesday between school administrators, a pair of board members, Salem Police Patrolman Brad Davis and Sgt. J.T. Panezotti, the incoming police chief.

Bratten said a lot of students were arriving before many of the staff members and coming in all different entrances. This way, staff members will see who’s coming into the building and know whether they belong there or not.

Board President Andrew Null said that was something they could improve immediately.

“It’s an ongoing evaluation process,” he said.

Safety and security will remain a topic at monthly board meetings under the Buildings and Grounds Committee report, which is a new effort aimed at keeping the community informed about what the district is doing better, although board Vice President Steve Bailey explained they won’t be able to tell parents and the public everything they’re doing, since it is for security.

The district already has plans in place, but he said they’re continuing to work on them and see what other areas they need to tweak.

Bratten said they always walk through all the buildings at the beginning of every school year to look at what can be done better and make changes as they go. They don’t wait for something to happen.

Timberlanes ex-owner pleads guilty to tax counts

By LARRY SHIELDS
Staff Writer

CLEVELAND — Melissa Snively-Pallard, the former Timberlanes Restaurant and Motor Inn owner and general manager, faces up to five years in prison and a fine of up to $250,000 after pleading guilty to two of seven counts of a federal income tax indictment in Cleveland on Thursday.

Craig Casserly, a spokesperson for the Internal Revenue Service, said Snively-Pallard’s pleading “will constitute two counts of failure to account for and pay over employment taxes.”

The case was before Judge Patricia Gaughan and prosecuted by Assistant United States Attorney John M. Siegel, following an investigation by the Internal Revenue Service criminal investigation unit in Akron.

Casserly had no details regarding the plea agreement, but said Snively-Pallard, 33, who was indicted on seven counts by a federal grand jury last September, will be sentenced at 11:30 a.m. April 25.

He said details will be forthcoming.

Steven M. Dettelbach, United States Attorney for the Northern District of Ohio, charged Snively with failing to report and pay employment taxes owed by the corporation she previously owned.

The indictment said that Snively-Pallard, also known as Melissa Snively and Melissa Pallard, was the owner, president, chief executive officer, and general manager of Timberlanes and that for the seven calendar quarters, from the second quarter of 2006 through the end of 2007, she failed to report and pay to the Internal Revenue Service federal income taxes and Federal Insurance Contributions Act (FICA) taxes that Timberlanes withheld from its employees’ wages with a combined total of approximately $93,927.

She ran the restaurant and motel, a Salem landmark, for several years in the early to mid-2000’s before it wound up being purchased in a sheriff’s auction in July of 2012.

Federal tax liens of $33,945, $602,809 and $348,346 were released from the property’s record for that transaction.

In September of 2006, Snively-Pallard received a $2.13 million loan from Kennedy Funding, a New Jersey-based direct private lender, to renovate the facility and offered it as collateral.

Frack sand silos

This frack sand terminal about a mile south of Minerva on Arbor Road in Carroll County is planned to be a high capacity operation, according to the website Pop ‘N Rail. The Minerva station is operated by D&I and currently has the ability to stage over 500 rail cars with an initial 8,000 tons of silo capacity. Two silos are visible just past the rail cars. The Minerva location is one of 10 destination terminals as many of the sites undergo capital improvements related to the shale boom. The station serves the The Ohi-Rail Corporation railroad company that operates from the Youngstown area, beginning in Minerva and ending in Hopedale, Ohio. Pop ‘N Rail said the Minerva terminal is in the heart of some of the more promising Utica shale opportunities. (Salem News photo by Larry Shields)

Water lawsuit may finally be over

By TOM GIAMBRONI
Staff Writer

LISBON — East Liverpool’s lawsuit against the Buckeye Water District appears to have finally been resolved, with the city agreeing Thursday to accept another $300,000 from the BWD to settle the dispute once and for all.

This brings to $6.2 million the total amount East Liverpool will be paid by the BWD under the proposed settlement agreement reached during a hearing held in Columbiana County Common Pleas Court.

“It seems like you had a lot more hair when this thing started,” East Liverpool Mayor Jim Swoger joked afterwards to a newspaper reporter, referring to the fact the lawsuit dates back to 2005.

The hearing was in response to a BWD motion asking Judge C. Ashley Pike to enforce a verbal agreement reached last April that would have paid East Liverpool $5.9 million to settle the lawsuit. After the BWD came up with the money, the city changed its mind, saying it wanted another $600,000 to $700,000 in interest.

The interest was on the $4.8 million judgment awarded East Liverpool for winning its breach-of-contract lawsuit against the BWD after the BWD quit purchasing water from the city in the early 2000s.

Prior to the start of Thursday’s hearing, Judge Pike gave the attorneys another chance to resolve the dispute through negotiations, and they agreed to give it one more shot.

“I don’t mean to twist arms ... but I think the public is more than ready for this thing to be settled,” Pike said.

Later that day the attorneys returned from closed-door meetings with a tentative agreement that will need to be put in writing and signed by the judge before it becomes final.

To resolve the lawsuit, the BWD agreed to:

- Pay East Liverpool a total of $6.2 million — the $4.8 million judgment, plus $1.4 million in interest. The above-mentioned additional $300,000 will come from BWD funds that had been frozen by the court pending the outcome of the lawsuit.

—Pay East Liverpool an additional $350,000, plus interest, should the U.S. Department of Agriculture file a lawsuit laying claim to any of the BWD funds used in the settlement.

The USDA has loaned the BWD millions of dollars to fund various projects, and East Liverpool wanted the federal agency to waive any right to USDA money that the BWD may have used as part of the settlement agreement.

The USDA had already told the BWD, which informed East Liverpool, that it could not grant a waiver since it was not a party to the lawsuit. The USDA assured the BWD in an email it had no intention of filing any such lawsuit, but the city remained concerned.

—Hold East Liverpool harmless should the USDA file such a lawsuit against the city and the BWD and win.

Columbiana residents likely face big water rate hike

By KATIE SCHWENDEMAN
Staff Writer

COLUMBIANA — City residents will likely see an increase on their water bills over the next two years, a result of the city’s payback on a 40-year loan for the new water treatment plant.

Acting City Manager and Finance Director Mike Harold told council this week the United States Department of Agriculture (USDA) has proposed rate increases through 2015.

Should the city go with the proposed rates, customers would be paying $11.30 per 1,000 gallons each month in 2015. Customers are currently paying $6.54.

Harold explained the USDA calculated the rate increases to ensure the city will be able to pay back the 40-year, zero-interest loan for the multi-million-dollar project.

The USDA loan would pay for a majority of the nearly $15 million plant slated for construction next year.

After looking over the proposed rates councilmen Bob Bieshelt and Bryan Blakeman were concerned the increases would be too costly for customers.

Blakeman said customers would be experiencing an 80 percent increase in water rates over two years.

“People would be in a mad exodus out of this city,” he said.

Bieshelt suggested Harold take a look at the total water bill, in gallons, and stretch the rates out “as far as they stretch” to pay back the loan.

“Let’s do it ourselves and know what we know rather than what the bureaucrats are telling us,” he said.

Bieshelt has said over the course of the project that residents should not have to pay for the new plant and he is not pleased rates have been increased for customers three times over the years.

In September of last year, when former City Manager Keith Chamberlin anticipated the rate increase, Bieshelt said a surplus should have been built up in the water fund over time to offset the project’s cost.

The fund does not have a surplus and is currently at about $500,000, Harold said.

Chamberlin advised council at that time a rate increase was “likely” but declined to offer an estimate on how much of an increase should be expected.

ALMANAC

Today is Friday, Jan. 25, the 25th day of 2013. There are 340 days left in the year. ived in the United States. Ten years ago: NASA launched a spacecraft into orbit to measure all of the radiation streaming toward Earth from the sun. Five years ago: President George W. Bush urged Congress to quickly pass an economic stimulus package void of extraneous spending, saying only quick action would kickstart the sputtering economy. One year ago: U.S. military forces flew into Somalia in a night-time helicopter raid, freeing an American and a Danish hostage and killing nine pirates.

NASA testing vintage engine from Apollo days

HUNTSVILLE, Ala. (AP) — A vintage rocket engine built to blast the first U.S. lunar mission into Earth’s orbit more than 40 years ago is again rumbling across the Southern landscape.

The engine, known to NASA engineers as No. F-6049, was supposed to help propel Apollo 11 into orbit in 1969, when NASA sent Neil Armstrong and two other astronauts to the moon for the first time. The flight went off without a hitch, but no thanks to the engine — it was grounded because of a glitch during a test in Mississippi and later sent to the Smithsonian Institution, where it sat for years.

Now, young engineers who weren’t even born when Armstrong took his one small step are using the bell-shaped motor in tests to determine if technology from Apollo’s reliable Saturn V design can be improved for the next generation of U.S. missions back to the moon and beyond by the 2020s.

They’re learning to work with technical systems and propellants not used since before the start of the space shuttle program, which first launched in 1981.

Nick Case, 27, and other engineers at NASA’s Marshall Space Flight Center on Thursday completed a series of 11 test firings of the F-6049’s gas generator, a jet-like rocket which produces 30,000 pounds of thrust and was used as a starter for the engine. They are trying to see whether a second-generation version of the Apollo engine could produce even more thrust and be operated with a throttle for deep-space exploration.

There are no plans to send the old engine into space, but it could become a template for a new generation of motors incorporating parts of its design.

In NASA-speak, the old 18-foot-tall motor is called an F-1 engine. During moon missions, five of them were arranged at the base of the 363-foot-tall Saturn V system and fired together to power the rocket off the ground toward Earth orbit.

Thursday’s test used one part of the engine, the gas generator, which powers the machinery to pump propellant into the main rocket chamber. It doesn’t produce the massive orange flame or clouds of smoke like that of a whole F-1, but the sound was deafening as engineers fired the mechanism in an outdoor test stand on a cool, sunny afternoon.

The device produced a plume that resembled a blow torch the size of two buses and set fire to a grassy area, which was quickly extinguished.

And just like during the Apollo days, people in north Alabama heard rockets thundering in the distance during tests at Marshall.

“My wife and daughter were in our front yard and she said they could hear it, which was pretty cool,” Case said after an earlier test. “We live about 15 miles away.”

Obama’s choice for secretary of state, Kerry spells out policy for friendly panel

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. John Kerry, President Barack Obama’s nominee for secretary of state, collected pledges of support Thursday and testified at his confirmation hearing that U.S. foreign policy should be defined by a helping hand as well as military strength.

The Massachusetts Democrat discussed Iran, Syria, climate change and a variety of issues with members of the Foreign Relations Committee at a hearing that recalled an unusual American life — son of a diplomat, Navy lieutenant who volunteered for Vietnam, anti-war protester, five-term senator, unsuccessful nominee for president, and Obama’s unofficial envoy.

The nearly four-hour hearing also provided an odd juxtaposition as Kerry, a member of the panel for 28 years and its chairman for the last four, sat alone in the witness chair. At one point, Sen. Bob Menendez, D-N.J., the incoming chairman who presided, mistakenly referred to Kerry as “Mr. Secretary.”

The current secretary, Hillary Rodham Clinton, introduced Kerry, calling him “the right choice.” She is stepping down after four years.

The committee is expected to approve Kerry’s nomination early next week, and a full Senate vote could occur before the month is out.

Smoking penalty: Individual health care coverage could become unaffordable

WASHINGTON (AP) — Millions of smokers could be priced out of health insurance because of tobacco penalties in President Barack Obama’s health care law, according to experts who are just now teasing out the potential impact of a little-noted provision in the massive legislation.

The Affordable Care Act — “Obamacare” to its detractors — allows health insurers to charge smokers buying individual policies up to 50 percent higher premiums starting next Jan. 1.

For a 55-year-old smoker, the penalty could reach nearly $4,250 a year. A 60-year-old could wind up paying nearly $5,100 on top of premiums.

Younger smokers could be charged lower penalties under rules proposed last fall by the Obama administration. But older smokers could face a heavy hit on their household budgets at a time in life when smoking-related illnesses tend to emerge.

Workers covered on the job would be able to avoid tobacco penalties by joining smoking cessation programs, because employer plans operate under different rules. But experts say that option is not guaranteed to smokers trying to purchase coverage individually.

Mali rebel group splits amid blistering French air strikes, growing African force

SAN, Mali (AP) — Mali’s rebel movement showed new signs of discord on Thursday in the wake of punishing French air strikes, with one wing of the Ansar Dine group now pledging to negotiate an end to the country’s crisis and possibly even fight against its former comrades-in-arms.

France’s air and land campaign that began two weeks ago to save Mali’s embattled interim government has shaken up the military landscape and put the international spotlight on the former French colony. Mali’s government was on a new political defensive, urging its soldiers to respect human rights after new allegations that they had carried out summary executions in zones of battle against the radical Islamists.

Three al-Qaida-linked extremist groups have controlled Mali’s vast northeast for months, capitalizing on chaos that followed a coup d’etat in Mali’s capital, Bamako, in March. But in a new sign of splintering, former Ansar Dine leader Al-ghabass Ag Intalla told the Associated Press on Thursday that he and his men were breaking off from Ansar Dine “so that we can be in control of our own fate.”

“We are neither AQIM or MUJAO,” he said of the other groups, al-Qaida in the Islamic Maghreb and the Movement for the Unity and Jihad in West Africa, known by its French-language acronym. “We are a group of people from the north of Mali who have a set of grievances that date back at least 50 years.” The comments suggested that at least some of Islamist fighters are searching for an exit in the wake of the French airstrikes. French radio RFI reported earlier Thursday that Intalla’s new group will be called the Islamic Movement for the Azawad, a Tuareg term for northern Mali, and his men are willing to fight their former comrades-in-arms in Ansar Dine.

Al-Qaida’s No. 2 in Yemen died of wounds from a US drone attack

SANAA, Yemen (AP) — Al-Qaida’s No. 2 in Yemen died of wounds sustained in a U.S. drone attack last year in southern Yemen, the country’s official news agency and a security official said Thursday.

Saeed al-Shihri, a Saudi national who fought in Afghanistan and spent six years in the U.S. military prison at Guantanamo Bay, was wounded in a missile attack in the southern city of Saada on Oct. 28, according to SABA news agency. The agency said that had fallen into a coma since then. It was not clear when he actually died.

A security official said that the missile had been fired by a U.S. -operated, unmanned drone aircraft. He spoke on condition of anonymity because he was not authorized to speak to the press. Yemen had previously announced al-Shihri’s death in a Sept. 10 drone attack in the province of Hadramawt. A subsequent DNA test however proved that the body recovered was not that of al-Shihri.

Honduran government in chaos, can’t pay its bills, neglects basic services

TEGUCIGALPA, Honduras (AP) — Street surveillance cameras in one of the world’s most dangerous cities were turned off last week because Honduras’ government hasn’t paid millions of dollars it owes. The operator that runs them is now threatening to suspend police radio service as well.

Teachers have been demonstrating almost every day because they haven’t been paid in six months, while doctors complain about the shortage of essential medicines, gauze, needles and latex gloves.

This Central American country has been on the brink of bankruptcy for months, as lawmakers put off passing a budget necessary to pay for basic government services. Honduras is also grappling with $5 billion in foreign debt, a figure equivalent to last year’s entire government budget.

“There are definitely patients who haven’t been able to get better because of this problem,” said Dr. Lilian Discua, a pediatrician. “An epileptic who doesn’t take his medicine will have a crisis. This is happening.”

The messages said they had been selected via the Internet for a job application through a job search. Neither of them had applied with this company.
— Officers were dispatched at 8:09 a.m. Thursday to the 100 block of North Ellsworth Avenue after the fire department was contacted for a medical call. It was unknown why a woman called for an ambulance for herself. She declined treatment and left the area.
— Police were called at 7:46 a.m. Thursday to the 1500 block of Salem Parkway West for an attempted theft overnight. Someone had attempted to remove a large block motor from the side of a business, but were unable to load it into a truck. Suggestions were provided on how to better protect the property.
— A disturbance was reported at 6 a.m. Thursday in the 100 block of North Ellsworth Avenue where all parties were separated when police arrived and said there were no further problems and nothing needed from officers.
— An officer on Thursday was able to identify a truck involved in wires coming down in the 600 block of North Ellsworth Avenue two days ago. Lisa Hutter called police at 3:21 p.m. Tuesday to report a semi truck caused wires to be pulled from her residence. She lost her phone and Internet service due to the damage. The wires were moved off of the road. An officer spoke with a company spokesman regarding the truck. The spokesman claimed the semi truck was not at fault and the cable company would have to fix the damage. She claimed the wires must be a minium height of 13 feet 6 inches and their trucks were under that. She did admit the driver got turned around off of his route and was in that area at that time.

Leetonia woman sentenced for not returning mom's car

By DEANNE JOHNSON
Staff Writer
LISBON — A 23-year-old Leetonia woman was sentenced in Columbiana County Municipal Court Thursday to 180 days in jail for unauthorized use of a motor vehicle after taking her mother's car with permission to do so for only a short time and then failing to return it within 48 hours.
According to Assistant County Prosecutor Don Humphrey, Megan Detchon was taken into custody in a disreputable neighborhood in Youngstown, where she was with her boyfriend, who is a registered sex offender, and her 2 1/2-year-old daughter.
The boyfriend, Brooks Cartwright, 31, Rush Boulevard, Youngstown, was in court earlier in the week when he was bound over to the county grand jury on a charge of failure to notify authorities of his change of address as a registered sexual offender.
Detchon has been in custody for 10 days on the felony unauthorized use of a motor vehicle charge and was credited with that time served. While Humphrey and her defense attorney Eric Kibler recommended a plea agreement where she would serve only another 10 days, Judge Mark Frost did not suspend the remaining jail time. He did set the matter for review on Feb. 4, which would leave her serving at least another 11 days.

Humphrey said the days Detchon serves will afford time for her mother to find her another place to stay, hopefully with a substance abuse treatment program. Detchon passed a drug test ordered by Frost, but the judge did note she has already been in custody for some time.
Humphrey said there are additional issues including possible credit card misuse, which are being investigated, but no charges have been filed.
Another concern held by Humphrey was a claim by Detchon that she is currently pregnant. Detchon confirmed her belief of a pregnancy in the courtroom, adding she thinks Cartwright is the father and she could be more than eight months along. But she also admitted her condition has not yet been diagnosed by a physician. Detchon said a nurse at the jail has set her up an appointment with a doctor.
“I don't want the county paying for the delivery of this baby,” Humphrey said of his recommendation for 10 days to serve with the remaining 160 suspended.
Detchon's daughter is reportedly now in the custody of grandparents, as ordered by Juvenile Court Judge Thomas Baronzzi. Frost said when Detchon is released she is not to interfere with the custody situation. Additionally he said when she is placed on probation he will order her to stay away from Cartwright and undergo more drug testing.
“The guy you were hanging around with that day has a record of doing bad stuff,” Frost said to Detchon. “You took your daughter to a neighborhood with a bad reputation. That's where people get shot, you know that?”
Detchon piped up that she actually believed the south side of Youngstown to be one of the better areas in the city.
“Your mother was put into a position of doing something she probably didn't want to do,” Frost said of the mother's decision to file charges, “but she did it because she loved her daughter and her granddaughter.”
Frost continued that he was very concerned Detchon believes she is as much as eight and a half months pregnant, but had yet to see a doctor.
“There are drugs in this case, whether it's you or your boyfriend,” Frost added. “I hope for the sake of your unborn child, it's not you.”
The plea agreement included reducing the unauthorized use of a motor vehicle charge from a felony to a first-degree misdemeanor.

Stop covering for criminals in Ohio

Ohioans who believe they can rely on criminal background checks to warn them against hiring dangerous employees may be wrong. In fact, the state Bureau of Criminal Investigation is, in effect, lying about some ex-convicts' records — because state law requires it.

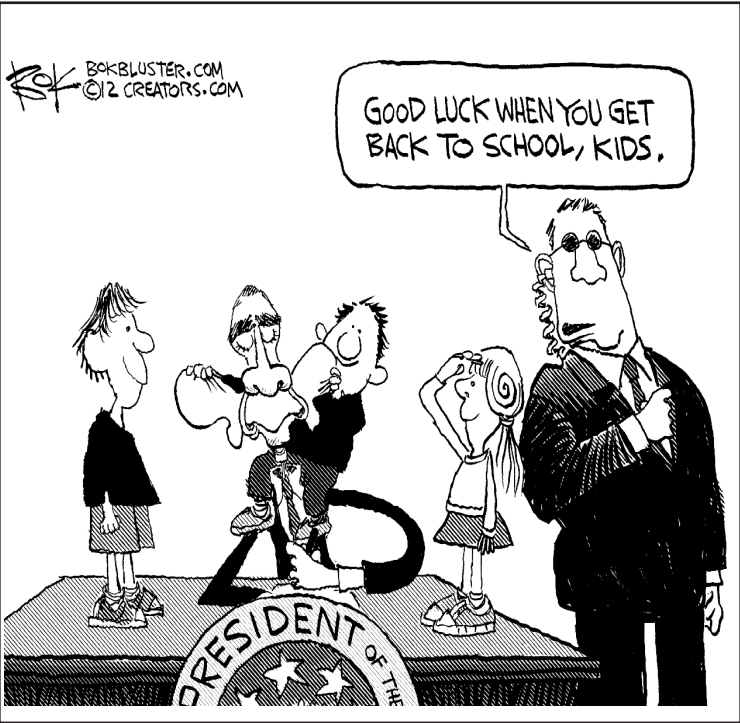

A complex bill the General Assembly enacted last summer is to blame. Sometimes referred to as Senate Bill 337, the measure deals with a wide variety of criminal law issues. Part of it is intended to ensure that former criminals who have paid their debts to society are able to get jobs once they leave prison.

But state officials have interpreted part of the law involving sealing of criminal records to mean that when employers do background checks on potential new hires, they are not to be told the whole truth in some cases. That has Attorney General Mike DeWine concerned. He has discovered 24 situations in which potential harm could have resulted from less-than-candid responses by the BCI to background check requests. In one case, a man who had been convicted of rape was hired for a job involving work with children. In another, a woman was hired at a hospital even though she previously had been found mentally incompetent to stand trial for murder. In both cases — and others — the BCI was prohibited from providing critical information to employers.

Part of the problem is misguided concern for adults who had been convicted of crimes while they were juveniles. Murder and sex crimes are the only juvenile offenses state officials are allowed to report on background checks. Even sex crimes are not revealed unless the adult in question is still required to be on the state sex offender registry.

Pitfalls in the new law are obvious — and should have been when legislators were considering the bill. As DeWine points out, the flaws could put some people in danger.

Legislators should take another look at the law and rescind parts of it that could result in dangerous ex-convicts being hired for jobs they have no business holding.

Sign code as bludgeon for eminent domain construed until 2005.

Founded in 1934, Central Radio maintains communication, sonar and camera equipment on vessels at Norfolk Naval Station. The business is located in a building designed for its needs near the waterfront. Company Vice President Kelly Dickinson says, "We can drive five minutes and be on board a ship."

But Old Dominion University is nearby and covetous. It wants the land on which Central Radio sits, and through ODU's Real Estate Foundation is well along toward seizing it by inciting the city government to wield the power of eminent domain. Condemnation proceedings against Central Radio have moved to the compensation phase. Dickinson says the compensation will NORFOLK, Va. — A dreadfully familiar dialectic is on display here: Government is behaving badly in order to silence protests of other bad behavior. It is violating the Constitution's First Amendment, stifling speech about its violation of the Fifth Amendment, as it was properly be insufficient to enable the business to construct a comparable building, let alone buy land for it. ODU, whose plans for the neighborhood remain interestingly vague and may include a shopping center, is exploiting the judicial evisceration of the Fifth Amendment's takings clause, the history of which is this:

The Constitution's authors, who did not scatter adjectives carelessly, said property may be taken for "public" uses, meaning things — roads, bridges, buildings, etc. — directly owned by government and used by the general public. In 1954, however, in a case arising from what was then complacently called "urban renewal," the Supreme Court expanded the category of "public use" to include the "public purpose" of curing "blight," a concept of enormous elasticity when wielded by rapacious city governments. In 2005, in the Kelo case from New London, Conn., the court radically attenuated the "public use" restriction on takings. The court held, 5-4, that a city government can seize an unblighted neighborhood for the supposed "public" purpose of turning it over to a private business that, being wealthier than the previous owners, would be a richer source of tax revenues for the taking government.

In this appalling decision, the majority serenely said governments could be restrained by public opinion aroused against abuses of eminent domain. Now, however, Norfolk's government is suppressing Central Radio's speech protesting what the city is doing.

In their desperation, the company's executives hung from their building, facing busy Hampton Boulevard, a 375 square-foot banner proclaiming:

50 YEARS ON THIS STREET
78 YEARS IN NORFOLK
100 WORKERS
THREATENED BY EMINENT DOMAIN!

In the banner's lower right-hand corner is a circle with a red slash through the words "Eminent Domain Abuse."

Today that circle is all that is visible. The city, acting on a complaint by ODU's Real Estate Foundation — the entity trying to seize the company's property — says the size of the full sign violates Norfolk's sign code. Norfolk's behavior is unconstitutional because:

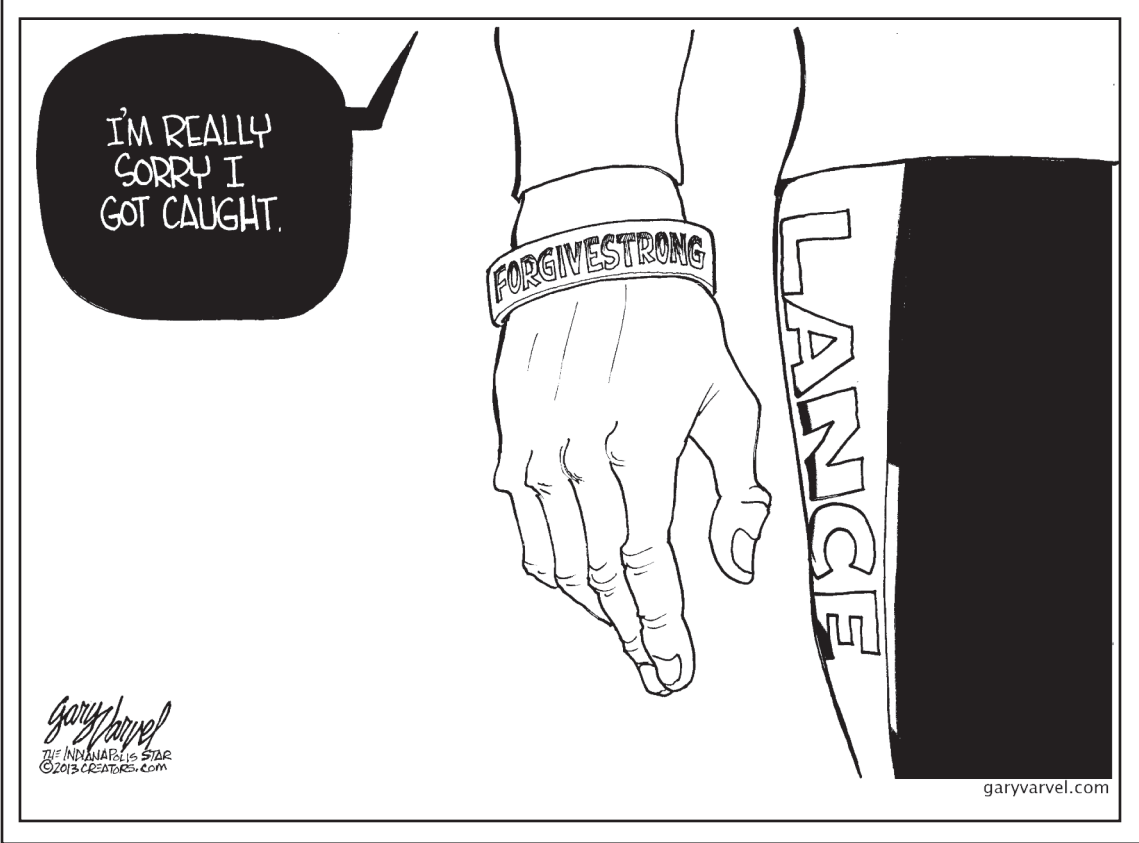

The city's sign code, which is of rabbinical complexity, has been capriciously enforced — some banners on city and private buildings violate the code's size restrictions. The code is more permissive regarding signs with particular content (e.g., government messages or religious symbols), which violates First Amendment jurisprudence prohibiting content discrimination. The sign code is suddenly being more evenhandedly enforced but only because, a city official has admitted, since Central Radio began protesting, "people are watching." Furthermore, any content-based speech restriction must pass judicial "strict scrutiny" by establishing that it is necessary to achieve a compelling governmental interest, but the government's only interest in restricting Central Radio's speech is to make it easier for the government to throw its weight around.

We have seen this before. A few years ago, a St. Louis man whose property was being seized under Kelo's permission for government theft adorned his building with a sign similar in size and message to that of Central Radio's. The city government tried to silence him with sign restrictions as flawed and capriciously enforced as Norfolk's are. An alderwoman explained with ruinous candor: "If this sign is allowed to remain, then anyone with property along any thoroughfare can paint signs ... to influence passersby and with no control by any city agency." Uncontrolled speech? Gracious.

The St. Louis man trounced the city in his sign dispute, helped by the Institute for Justice, a little platoon of libertarian litigators who roam the country putting leashes on misbehaving governments.

Because IJ is representing Central Radio's First Amendment rights, Norfolk may have to content itself with traducing only one rather than two provisions of the Bill of Rights.

Speech: No patsy now

My inner Pollyanna was basking in blissfulness, rolling in the hay of righteous rhetoric, backstroking through the sunny sibilance of aspiration.

Drunk, apparently, on alliteration.

It was a perfect day. Cold but not freezing. Crowded but not crushing. A diverse people celebrating yet another historic day in the nation's capital.

In one poignant moment, he paused while re-entering the Capitol and turned for a last look at his kingdom and subjects: "I want to take a look one more time," said President Barack Obama. "I'm not going to see this again."

OK, fine, he's not king and voters are not subjects. At least not yet. But it must have felt that way, especially having just delivered an inaugural address that informed the nation that things are about to change, royally.

Bipartisanship brunches notwithstanding, there was no hint in Obama's words that he was interested in chatting up his political opposition over common ground. When he turned to bid farewell to a memory, he might as well have been bidding farewell to his former self — the conciliatory politician who once declared that there is no red America nor a blue America. "Sayonara, suckers. You'll never see that guy again."

Obama may have entered the presidency hoping to bring an end to partisanship, but he entertains no such fantasies now. As he once told a handful of reporters on Air Force One, "I'm no patsy."

Confident and experienced in his second term, Obama has become fully himself. Which is not to say that I disagree with everything or even most of what he said — at least thematically. Who isn't for justice, equality, love, climate stability and peace in our time? Sign me up.

Confession: With speeches as with movies, I'm not much of an instant critic. I don't watch a movie; I enter it. I want to lose myself, to feel what the actor feels, to experience the world as he does. I check my snark at the door.

Thus, Pollyanna saw the inauguration this way:

Obama, the first black president entering a second term on Martin Luther King Jr. Day, seized the moment and left perfect storms whimpering in envy. Expansive in his vision of a United States, bound by common purpose and the belief that all men and women are created equal, he reiterated the Great American Truth: That every man and woman has an inalienable right to pursue happiness and prosperity on a level playing field, equal in all ways under all laws.

Sing it! Mine eyes have seen the glory of the coming of the Lord. ... His truth is marching on!

Then he said: "We have always understood that when times change, so must we; that fidelity to our founding principles requires new responses to new challenges; that preserving our individual freedoms ultimately requires collective action."

Yes, yes, yes! I'll have what he's having. I'll go sleeveless in winter and cut my bangs! Of course we change when necessary. And of course we have to work to keep those truths ... truthful.

Then along comes little Miss Monday Morning, who always begins her sentences with, "Yes, but." What does this mean, substantively? Ah:

"The commitments we make to each other through Medicare, and Medicaid, and Social Security — these things do not sap our initiative; they strengthen us. They do not make us a nation of takers; they free us to take the risks that make this country great."

Loose translation: Entitlement reform will not be topping the president's second-term agenda. What it means beyond this is any palm reader's guess.

We understand that we're not a nation of takers (as Paul Ryan once regrettably put it), but how entitlement programs that far exceed our ability to pay for them "free us to take the risks that make this country great" is gobbledygook of the first order. It reeks of caffeine and the smug satisfaction familiar to all writers, who, upon crafting a sentence that is full of sound and fury signifying nothing, ignore the editor's imperative: Delete, delete, delete. Or as I prefer to put it, kill your little darlings.

What it all really means, of course, is that Barack Obama has been liberated by a second term, free to take risks that he hopes will make his legacy great. This is his moment, his emancipation proclamation, his hinge point of history — and there's no looking back now.

London Evening Standard on France's military intervention in Mali:

France's surprise intervention in Mali may well turn out to be more than French President Francois Hollande bargained for. The French have lost at least one airman, while Islamist rebels continued to advance, taking the government-controlled town of Diabaly. France's hope was that it could turn the tide using air power and a relatively small contingent of special forces on the ground but already it looks likely to commit more troops in the coming weeks. Yet this is an intervention worth supporting — and British Prime Minister David Cameron deserves credit for doing so, albeit in a modest way.

Mali's Islamist rebels are al Qaeda-affiliated and hard-line. The comparison should be to Afghanistan rather than Iraq or Libya: a well-armed jihadist army threatens to topple what had, until last year's army coup, been a functioning democracy. Without intervention there is a real risk of the whole country falling under the control of the Islamists and then becoming a base for anti-Western jihadists. France's intervention, now supported by the UN, must succeed — and be followed by a restoration of democracy in this poor and threatened African nation. It is an action that Britain is right to support.

South Range board grants easement for ODOT work

By KEVIN HOWELL
Staff Writer

BEAVER TOWNSHIP— The South Range Local school board Thursday morning granted a temporary easement to the Ohio Department of Transportation (ODOT) for its road improvement project on state Route 46 slated for this summer.

Schools Superintendent Dennis Dunham said that ODOT needed an easement on the east side of the road toward the athletic facility for some drainage and utility work associated with the project that will include the addition of a turning lane and pedestrian tunnel under Route 46 at the K-12 campus and athletic facility entrances.

The Eastgate Regional Council of Governments last February announced that it had secured $1.6 million for the project which is designed to improve the flow of traffic and increase pedestrian safety, according to ODOT. It is tentatively scheduled to be bid out in May and completed this summer. No school funds are being used for the project.

The new plant is needed because the existing plant on the southeast end of the city is outdated and does not feature a back-up system.

Harold told Bieshelt different rates could be calculated by the city since the USDA rates are only a proposal.

Councilman James King asked how the USDA rates were calculated, and Harold said he wasn’t sure.

King then suggested Arcadis Engineering employees attend the next council meeting to answer their questions.

The company was hired for the project by the on a $690,000 contract in 2008.

Council then approved a second reading of an ordinance designating the services the city will provide to the 86.7 acres being annexed in from Fairfield Township for the new plant.

SETTLE

FROM 1A

The BWD would then be required to reimburse East Liverpool dollar-for-dollar for its losses from such a lawsuit.

“No one believes even remotely that this could happen,” BWD attorney Fred Emmerling said of a USDA lawsuit.

Everyone expressed relief the lengthy lawsuit appeared to finally be put to rest nearly eight years after it was first filed.

“I’m just glad its behind us and we can move ahead doing what we do, putting in lines and making the district better,” said BWD Director Al DeAngelis. “That what we’re here for: To get water to the people.”

DeAngelis said the BWD can pay the settlement without having to raise rates. The BWD is putting up $3.6 million of its own funds, plus $1.1 million received from leasing property for shale gas development and $1.5 million loaned the BWD by county commissioners.

Mayor Swoger said all of this could have been avoided if BWD had simply lived up to its agreement. “This never had to happen if they just would have communicated with us,” he said, adding it would have only cost the BWD $2 million to continue purchasing the minimum amount of water from the city over the remainder of the contract.

County Commission Chairman Mike Halleck expressed his relief the lawsuit was finally resolved. Commissioners were also on the hook for the judgment as co-defendants because Pike ruled they were liable by virtue of having created the BWD in the 1990s out of the former county water district.

“I still contend the board should never have been put in this position in the first place, but the court ruled otherwise. I think it’s a bit of a stretch for anyone with common sense to say that commissioners should be held liable when we only appoint three of the nine (BWD) members,” Halleck said.

Salem schools to seek improvement levy renewal

By MARY ANN GREIER
Staff Writer

SALEM — Voters in the Salem school district will be asked to renew a 2-mill permanent improvement levy on the May 7 primary ballot, a decision officials said won’t cost taxpayers any more than what they’re already paying.

Board members agreed Thursday to place the levy renewal on the ballot. They had already voted at a special meeting earlier this month to have the amount for the levy certified.

The levy first came on in 1983 and was last renewed by voters in 2008 for a five-year period. The board is again seeking renewal for five years.

District Treasurer Jim Wilson said when the levy was last renewed, the amount to be generated per year was estimated at $320,900. If renewed this time around, the levy will generate an estimated $298,100 per year, according to the amount certified by the Columbiana County Auditor’s Office.

As the name implies, the permanent improvement levy is used for permanent improvements, such as purchasing buses or equipment or improving the buildings. Superintendent Tom Bratten said they used it in recent years to increase the district’s wireless capabilities in all the buildings and to help purchase iPads for students to use in the classrooms.

They’ve replaced boilers, replaced roofs, replaced buses which cost $90,000 each, redone parking lots and taken care of yearly improvements, such as painting rooms. They also used some of the money to replace the crumbled north wall at Reilly Stadium, a project which remains ongoing. The brick has been put in place and now they’re waiting for the ornamental fencing to be installed.

Board President Andrew Null said one of the goals the board set a few years ago after meeting with district residents was to continue to make improvements to buildings and facilities rather than try to get new buildings.

“We’re going to refurbish what we have,” he said.

The levy renewal was just one of the items approved by the board as part of the consent agenda. The board approved the hiring of Jennifer Carroll as the backup athletic trainer on an as-needed basis for home athletic events for the 2012/2013 school year at a rate of $50 per event. The board had already hired an athletic trainer last month and will only use Carroll if that trainer isn’t available for some reason.

In other personnel matters, the board hired Dennis Niederhiser as junior varsity baseball coach, hired Samantha Holisky as an intervention specialist at Reilly Elementary, hired Melinda Parke and Pat Sidingar as cafeteria workers at Reilly, approved family medical leave for Reilly teacher Rebecca Gallagher, approved classified substitutes Gudrun Colbert and Corey Cody and substitute teachers Rachel Russo and Karen Hunt, and accepted the resignation of Heather Smith as an office aide at the Hannah E. Mullins School of Practical Nursing.

At the beginning of the meeting, Bratten honored the board members and presented them with certificates and small glass tokens of appreciation engraved with their names. He said he appreciated the hours they put in, noting with all the committee work, they do more than just come to the board meeting once a month.

Council to meet on grant for downtown evaluation

By MARY ANN GREIER
Staff Writer

SALEM — A special meeting of Salem City Council will be called for 6 p.m. Tuesday regarding a state grant being sought by the Design Review Board to evaluate buildings in the downtown area.

The Rules and Ordinances Committee of City Council agreed Thursday to ask that an ordinance be prepared to authorize Mayor John Berlin to apply for the Certified Local Government grant and to accept it if awarded. The deadline to file the application is 5 p.m. Feb. 1.

The city qualifies as a CLG due to a historic preservation ordinance already put in place years ago and is eligible to apply for the grant funding through the Ohio Historic Preservation Office. The Design Review Board agreed to seek the city’s authorization to apply for the funding during a meeting just prior to the committee meeting.

Design Review Board Chairman Ginger Grilli explained the grant requires a 60/40 match, meaning the state would provide $22,491 and the local match would equal $15,003 for a total project cost of $37,494. She said the city would have no out-of-pocket cash costs, although some departments may contribute hours through their regular work. That time would be counted toward the local match, along with donated services and materials known as in-kind contributions. She said the affected departments would include the city auditor, the zoning office and the fire department since it handles building inspections for life safety standards.

She said the pre-development grant would cover evaluation of buildings in the defined area bordered by South Lincoln and Ellsworth avenues and Pershing and Second streets in two phases.

The first phase would entail an assessment of each structure, with both a historic evaluation and a structural evaluation. The historic evaluation would look at the building’s historic significance, such as its architecture and whether something or someone significant was associated with the building. The structural evaluation would look at mechanicals, such as air conditioning, heating, electrical, plumbing, the foundation, the roof and the windows, looking for any visible defects.

The volunteer assessment group would then rank the buildings that are considered historic and in the worst shape structurally and those nine buildings would be more thoroughly evaluated by a structural engineer.

Grilli said the goal would be to provide the building owners with information to help them decide what they can do with the buildings. She stressed that participation will be up to the building owners, noting that they know some building owners won’t take part.

“We hope everybody will participate,” she said.

They estimated there are 96 buildings in the defined area, which is part of the downtown historic district.

Councilwoman Cyndi Baronzzi Dickey questioned whether a building owner who decides to participate can be mandated to do anything. Grilli said there will be no mandates. She said the only time that could come into play would be through the city’s enforcement of the life safety standards already in place.

With talk about plans for revitalizing downtown, she said there was a concern the city could lose more buildings than it has to. She said they want to preserve as much as they can.

Grilli is involved in the Technical Advisory Committee, which is a private effort coming up with a plan for revitalizing the downtown. She said the TAC will make its final recommendation during a meeting at 6 p.m. Jan. 31 at the Salem Golf Club.

Wind, snow thwart search for plane in Antarctica

WELLINGTON, New Zealand (AP) — Hurricane-force winds and snow were preventing searchers Friday from reaching a plane believed to have crashed in an Antarctic mountain range while carrying three Canadians.

Its emergency locator started transmitting late Wednesday about 680 kilometers (420 miles) north of the South Pole, but the weather has prevented search planes overhead from seeing the presumed crash site itself.

Rescuers don’t know if the men are alive. Their plane has survival gear including tents and food.

The locator stopped transmitting Thursday night and crews have been unable to establish radio contact. Rescuers say a break in the weather is forecast Saturday.

One man on the plane has been identified as Bob Heath from the Northwest Territories, an experienced pilot in both the Antarctic and Arctic. Rescuers say the other two men were also part of the flight crew and that no passengers were aboard.

The propeller-driven de Havilland Twin Otter, was flying from a U.S. station near the pole to an Italian research base in Terra Nova Bay. Rescuers believe it crashed in the Queen Alexandra mountain range at an elevation of about 3,900 meters (13,000 feet).

Winds of up to 90 knots (104 miles per hour) have been blowing Thursday and Friday.

Steve Rendle, a spokesman for New Zealand’s Rescue Coordination Centre, said rescue planes circled the area on Thursday and Friday but have been unable to spot the downed plane due to poor visibility. He said the battery on the locator beacon may have run out but that rescuers have a good fix on its location.

He said that when the weather clears, crews hope to establish a forward base at the Beardmore Glacier about 50 kilometers (30 miles) from the assumed crash site.

He said there’s a rudimentary runway and a fuel depot at the glacier.

For now, two helicopters and a small plane remain at McMurdo Station, the main U.S. base about four hours’ flight away. He said the elevation provides extra challenges for helicopter crews.

Heath’s wife, Lucy Heath, told the Calgary Sun newspaper that airline officials had told her her husband’s plane was down, and she said she was just waiting for more news: “I’m so worried.”

Bob Heath wrote on networking site LinkedIn that he typically spends this time of year coaching and mentoring other pilots in polar regions.

The missing plane is owned and operated by Kenn Borek Air Ltd., a Calgary firm that charters aircraft to the U.S. Antarctic program. In a release, the National Science Foundation said the plane was flying in support of the Italian Antarctic program.

Authorities from New Zealand, Canada, the U.S. and Italy are working on the rescue operation.

BUSINESS HIGHLIGHTS

Analysts to Apple: Be nice to Wall Street

NEW YORK (AP) — Apple needs to come down off its pedestal and start making nice with Wall Street, analysts said Thursday as investors hammered the company's stock.

The sell-off put Apple a hair's-breadth away from losing its status as the world's most valuable company. At Thursday's close, it was worth $423 billion, just 1.6 percent more than No. 2 Exxon Mobil Corp.

The plunge was set off by Apple's quarterly earnings report late Wednesday, which suggested the company's nearly decade-long growth run is slowing drastically.

The stock ended down $63.51 or 12 percent, at $450.50. It last traded that low a year ago.

Obama picks prosecutor to head SEC

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Barack Obama sent his strongest signal yet Thursday that he wants the government to get tougher with Wall Street, appointing a former prosecutor to head the Securities and Exchange Commission for the first time in the agency's 79-year history.

Mary Jo White, former U.S. attorney in Manhattan, has an extensive record of prosecuting white-collar crime. She also won convictions in the 1993 World Trade Center bombing and the 1998 terrorist attacks on two U.S. embassies in Africa, and put crime boss John Gotti away.

If confirmed, she will have the job of enforcing complicated regulations written in response to the worst financial crisis since the Depression.

As layoffs drop, hopes rise for job gains

WASHINGTON (AP) — Employers are laying off fewer workers, a trend that normally suggests hiring is picking up. The January jobs report next week will show whether employers have begun to hire more freely or are still waiting for the economy to strengthen. The number of people seeking unemployment aid has reached a five-year low. Some employers, such as health care companies, restaurants and retailers, are hiring steadily. Yet overall job growth remains modest. And the unemployment rate is the same 7.8 percent it was when Barack Obama became president four years ago. The economy isn't growing fast enough to accelerate hiring. Flat pay and high unemployment are holding back consumer spending, which rose at a meager annual rate of 1.6 percent in the July-September quarter.

Fire victims' families wait for money

DHAKA, Bangladesh (AP) — When fire ravaged a Bangladeshi garment factory, killing 112 workers, dozens of their families did not even have a body to bury because their loved ones' remains were burned beyond recognition. Two months later, the same families have yet to receive any of the compensation they were promised — not even their relatives' last paychecks.

An official with the country's powerful garment industry said DNA tests must first be conducted to confirm the losses of more than 50 families. He would not say why the families have not even received the wages their relatives had earned before the Nov. 24 blaze. Many of the families desperately need money after losing their primary breadwinners in the fire at the Tazreen factory, which made clothes for Wal-Mart, Disney and other Western brands.

Congress charts new collision course

WASHINGTON (AP) — The nation's sharp disagreements over taxes and spending are on a re-routed collision course, as Senate Democrats launch a plan that includes new taxes and House Republicans vow to speed up their plan to balance the federal budget with spending cuts alone.

The Republicans' new approach would require even deeper cuts in social programs than they pushed last year. Liberals denounced those earlier plans as severe and unfair, and they say the new version would be worse.

The new commitments by House and Senate members stem from the ongoing dispute over raising the federal debt ceiling. The House voted Wednesday to postpone any show-down over the borrowing limit for three months. The Democratic-led Senate plans to endorse the idea, which the White House also supports.

United Continental posts 4Q loss

Travelers avoided United Airlines last year, leaving it with a fourth-quarter loss as it continues to pay for its stumbles in absorbing Continental. United Continental Holdings Inc. on Thursday reported a $620 million loss for the quarter as passenger traffic dropped 3.2 percent.

The loss was driven by $408 million in spending on the integration for things such as training and repainting airplanes. Superstorm Sandy hurt profits by $85 million, too.

Southwest's 4Q profit slips on costs

DALLAS (AP) — Southwest Airlines Co. said Thursday that fourth-quarter earnings fell by nearly half as costs rose for fuel, labor and maintenance. The airline's revenue climbed slightly, however, as the average fare increased by almost $8 from a year ago. Southwest said that bookings for the first three months of 2013 look strong. It said that based on bookings and ticket prices so far, a key revenue measure should rise by between 2 and 3 percent in January compared with the same month last year.

Although the rate of airfare increases has slowed since 2011, fares are still going up partly because airlines are limiting the number of flights, making seats scarcer. Southwest expects the industry as a whole to run about 1 to 2 percent fewer flights in early 2013 than in the same period last year.

3M says 4Q profit rose 3.9 percent

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Post-it notes and other office products helped lift 3M's fourth-quarter profit, despite a slowdown in other parts of its business.

The Maplewood, Minn.-based company earned $991 million, or $1.41 per share, up 3.9 percent from a year earlier. The results matched expectations of analysts surveyed by FactSet. 3M said profits grew in its consumer and office business, which makes Scotch tape and Post-it notes, as well as in its health care unit. Profits fell in all four of its other divisions, which make things like industrial products and construction materials.

NTSB: 787 battery shows short-circuiting

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Boeing 787 Dreamliner battery that caught fire earlier this month in Boston shows evidence of short-circuiting and a chemical reaction known as "thermal runaway," in which an increase in temperature causes progressively hotter temperatures, federal accident investigators said Thursday.

It's not clear to investigators which came first, the short-circuiting or the thermal runaway, National Transportation Safety Board Chairman Deborah Hersman said. Nor is it clear yet what caused either of them, she said during a news briefing on the board's investigation.

Facebook’s CEO plans fundraiser for Christie

TRENTON, N.J. (AP) — Facebook’s CEO has friended New Jersey Gov. Chris Christie again. Mark Zuckerberg will host a fundraiser for Christie next month at his home in Palo Alto, Calif.

The young tech billionaire and the Republican governor teamed up in 2010 when Zuckerberg pledged to donate $100 million to Newark’s public schools, which are under state control.

The Christie campaign said the fundraiser shows how much respect Christie has earned for taking on tough fights to reform and improve education. Christie said Thursday his relationship with Zuckerberg has turned into a friendship over the last three years.

“He picked up the phone unsolicited and asked what he could do to help,” the governor said. “He offered to do a fundraiser.”

When the founder of Facebook makes such an offer, Christie said, you answer, “Yes sir. What time? Happy to come.”

So far, the only prominent Democrat running against Christie is state Sen. Barbara Buono but the Democratic establishment has been trying to recruit a better-known candidate to challenge to the popular Christie.

Polls show Christie with a big lead heading into the November election. His first in-state fundraiser of the campaign season will be Feb. 4, the week before his California trip, he said.

Soldiers: Women should meet same standards as men in combat

SAN DIEGO (AP) — During her time in Iraq, Alma Felix would see her fellow female soldiers leave the Army installations where she worked at a desk job and head into combat with their male counterparts. But many returned home feeling that few knew of their contributions.

“We disappear into the background,” the 27-year-old former Army specialist said. “You always hear we’re losing our sons out there. And although women have fallen out there, you really don’t see very much of it.”

Now, with the Pentagon ending its ban on women in combat, Felix and other female troops hope the military’s plan to open hundreds of thousands of combat jobs to them will lead society to recognize that they, too, can be courageous warriors.

“We are the support. Those are the positions we fill and that’s a big deal — we often run the show — but people don’t see that,” she said. “Maybe it will put more females forward and give people a sense there are women out there fighting for our country.”

“It’s not just you’re typical poster boy, GI Joes doing it,” she said.

Thursday’s announcement promises to change the image of battlefields around the world, as debate rages on whether women can fight like men. What’s clear is that the move will pave the way for women to earn higher pay and earn better promotions.

The shift is the military’s biggest since the policy banning openly gay service members was lifted two years ago. And as was the case with “don’t ask, don’t tell,” troops were expected to fall in line with the new rules.

The change overturns a 1994 rule prohibiting women from being assigned to smaller ground combat units, and is expected to open up more than 230,000 combat positions that have been off limits to women.

“We owe it to them to allow them to pursue every avenue of military service for which they are fully prepared and qualified,” said Defense Secretary Leon Panetta. He said women have shown they are willing to fight and die alongside their male counterparts.

Across the country, members of the military of both sexes said they accepted the policy so long as women will have to meet the same standards as their male colleagues.

Both men and women were skeptical about putting females in infantry units, however.

“This gives us more people to work with,” said Army Sgt. Jeremy Grayson, assigned to field infantry at Fort Bliss, Texas. “But they would have to be able to do the physical stuff that men do ... They have to be able to pull their own weight.”

Panetta said the qualifications will not be lowered and acknowledged that not all women will meet them.

It will be up to the military service chiefs to recommend whether women should be excluded from any of those more demanding and deadly positions, such as Navy SEALs or the Army’s Delta Force.

Veterans and some in the military argue the public may not be ready to handle seeing more female troops come home in body bags or with lost limbs. “It’s harder to see a mother or a daughter dead. We (men) are seen as protectors,” said Army Staff Sgt. Anthony Lemaitre.

Army Spc. Jean Sardonas, who works as a lab technician at a hospital, said she understood Lemaitre’s opinion. Sardonas said she had thought about joining an Army team that conducts social work in the field and faces combat situations. But she’s since become a mother, changing her perspective, and said women tend to be more emotional.

“If you see the enemy, well, that’s the enemy, but now if you see a kid with a gun you’re going to think twice,” she said.

Paul Murphy, an 88-year-old Navy veteran in the Denver area who survived the sinking of the USS Indianapolis in the Philippine Sea in 1945, doesn’t think women should be in combat because of the reaction back home.

“I don’t think the loved ones at home (believe that) females should be allowed to be killed by the enemy,” said Murphy, who was among only about 300 out of a crew of nearly 1,200 who survived after his ship was torpedoed by a Japanese submarine.

Women comprise about 14 percent of 1.4 million active military personnel. More than 280,000 women have been sent to Iraq, Afghanistan or to jobs in neighboring nations in support of the wars. And of the more than 6,600 U.S. service members who have been killed, 152 have been women.

The New York veteran who started the nation’s first Veteran of Foreign Wars post for women said she had no problem with them being considered for the elite units, as long as they meet the stringent requirements and that the standards are not lowered for them.

Making allowances for a female soldier would be “a detriment to the team,” said Marlene Roll, who served with an Army Reserve medical unit during the first Gulf War. But, she added, “If she can make it through the course and she can graduate, hell yeah.”

Irving named All-Star

CLEVELAND (AP) — Still not old enough to legally toast any of his accomplishments, Kyrie Irving joined one of the NBA's most elite groups.

And to top it off, he was named his city's top professional athlete — all in the same day.

Irving, the Cavaliers' dynamic point guard whose dazzling game belies his youth, was voted an All-Star reserve for the Eastern Conference on Thursday night, just hours before he was named Cleveland's top professional athlete for 2012, when he won the league's Rookie of the Year award.

"One of the best days of my life," Irving said backstage at the Greater Cleveland Sports Awards.

Irving, who won't turn 21 until March 23, is the sixth-youngest player ever named to an All-Star team and one of only seven to make it before their 21st birthday. The other six: Kobe Bryant, LeBron James, Magic Johnson, Kevin Garnett, Isiah Thomas and Shaquille O'Neal are either in the Hall of Fame or well on their way to induction.

"It's a big deal for me and a big deal for the city of Cleveland," Irving said after receiving his award before a ballroom filled with some of the area's top sports figures and civic leaders. "It means a lot. To be picked as an All-Star for the first time and be with those guys, to see those names on TV, it's truly a blessing."

Irving was at home alone watching the All-Star selection when his name flashed on the screen. He admitted to a solo celebration.

"I did jump around," he said. "I didn't do any backflips and cartwheels. I didn't want to get hurt."

Irving said his first phone call was to his girlfriend and the next to his father, Frederick, who raised him and his sister after their mother, Elizabeth, died when he was 4.

"It was an emotional moment," Irving said, "real emotional."

Soon after, Irving received a surprising text from his college coach, Duke's Mike Krzyzewski.

"First time ever," Irving said smiling. "I don't think Coach K has ever sent one of his players a text. I didn't even know he could text. I think his assistant sent it for him. My freshman year at Duke he told me never to text him because he didn't know how to text. So, times are changing."

Irving said he's not intimidated about sharing the stage at the Feb. 17 game in Houston with the NBA's best players.

"I just hope I don't air ball

Disabled to have right to sports

WASHINGTON (AP) — Breaking new ground, the U.S. Education Department is telling schools they must include students with disabilities in sports programs or provide equal alternative options. The directive, reminiscent of the Title IX expansion of athletic opportunities for women, could bring sweeping changes to school budgets and locker rooms for years to come.

Schools would be required to make "reasonable modifications" for students with disabilities or create parallel athletic programs that have comparable standing as mainstream programs.

"Sports can provide invaluable lessons in discipline, selflessness, passion and courage, and this guidance will help schools ensure that students with disabilities have an equal opportunity to benefit from the life lessons they can learn on the playing field or on the court," Education Secretary Arne Duncan said in a statement announcing the new guidance on Friday.

Federal laws, including the 1973 Rehabilitation Act and the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act, require states to provide a free public education to all students and bans schools that receive federal funds from discriminating against students with disabilities. Going further, the new directive from the Education Department's civil rights division explicitly tells schools and colleges that access to interscholastic, intramural and intercollegiate athletics is a right.

"This is a landmark moment for students with disabilities. This will do for students with disabilities what Title IX did for women," said Terri Lakowski, who led a coalition pushing for the changes for a decade. "This is a huge victory."

Education Department officials emphasized they did not intend to change sports' traditions dramatically or guarantee students with disabilities a spot on competitive teams. Instead, they insisted schools cannot exclude students based on their disabilities if they can keep up with their classmates.

"It's not about changing the nature of the game or the athletic activity," said Seth Galanter, the acting assistant secretary for civil rights at the Education Department.

It's not clear whether the new guidelines will spark a sudden uptick in sports participation. There was a big increase in female participation in sports after Title IX guidance instructed schools to treat female athletics on par with male teams. That led many schools to cut some men's teams, arguing that it was necessary to be able to pay for women's teams.

Super end to a long career for original Raven

OWINGS MILLS, Md. (AP) — For weeks, no one could determine when The Ray Lewis Retirement Tour would draw to a close.

Since Lewis announced on Jan. 2 his "last ride" in the NFL would coincide with the end of the Ravens' postseason run, there was the possibility that each game would be his last.

Now, after successful stops in Denver and New England, there is no longer any doubt: Win or lose, Lewis will perform for the final time on Feb. 3, in New Orleans on the NFL's grandest stage.

It wouldn't be surprising if Lewis approached the Super Bowl with a feeling of finality, but the 37-year-old middle linebacker insisted Thursday that he's thinking only about helping the Ravens beat the San Francisco 49ers.

"Honestly, outside of putting my head in the playbook and studying San Fran, I really haven't thought about anything else," Lewis said.

"It's going to be a great day, period, no matter what happens. And that's kind of the way I've approached it," he said. "I haven't even said, 'Oh man, this is your last game, what do you think?' I really haven't. Because I just really am keeping my teammates focused on the real prize."

Now in his 17th season, Lewis is preparing for his second Super Bowl — the first in 12 years. The last time he played for the NFL championship, Lewis earned MVP honors in Baltimore's 34-7 win over the New York Giants.

After waiting all this time to get back, Lewis has no intention of merely settling for being part of the big game.

"The real prize is actually going and winning the Super Bowl," he said. "It's great to get there, don't get me wrong, but to win it is something special."

And then, only then, Lewis will think about what it means to walk off the football field for the final time.

"You feel that confetti drop, I'll probably reflect then, when I'm there," he said. "But, it really hasn't crossed my mind like that."

San Francisco inside linebacker Patrick Willis, who wears No. 52, has nothing but admiration for Baltimore's No. 52.

"I'm just a big fan of him, period," Willis said Thursday. "Just his enthusiasm on the field, the passion he plays with. I've always been a big fan of those who play with passion, such as Ray Lewis. I know people always want to make comparisons and talk about torches and all this. At the end of the day, I always say I can only be the best player I can be."

"As a fellow linebacker, being at the Pro Bowl and being able to be coached by the same coach (Mike Nolan) at one point in time in our careers, we've become friends. Ray's one of those guys, he loves to give his wisdom and give his knowledge, and I'm the type that I love to listen — anybody who's been there, done that, especially his caliber of player, who's played a my first shot,” he joked.

IRVING

Irving is the first Cavaliers player to make the All-Star team since 2010, when James was voted in as a starter. Irving is averaging 23.7 points, 5.7 assists and 3.6 rebounds, but his selection by the East head coaches wasn't a given because of the Cavs' woeful 11-32 record.

Cleveland coach Byron Scott didn't do any campaigning for Irving, who scored 40 points on Tuesday night in a win over Boston. Scott believed Irving deserved the selection and was thrilled that his peers agreed.

Scott, who greeted Irving with a big hug when he arrived at the Renaissance Hotel, doesn't think a first All-Star selection will change his young star. Scott said it only make Irving hungrier for more.

“The thing that keeps him going is continuing to have new goals,” Scott said. “This year he's a reserve and next year he should want to be a starter. That should be his next step and in order to that he has to work even harder. The thing that is so good about him is that he's willing to work. He's going to continue to get better.

“And he's not 21 yet. He's well on his way to being one of the best.”

Irving's double win was perhaps the highlight of the star-studded event, which brought out some of Cleveland's top sports celebrities. Browns owner Jimmy Haslam and new coach Rob Chudzinski introduced themselves to guests eager to talk football. Ohio State coach Urban Meyer received a warm ovation as did boxing promoter Don King, who wore a sequined jacket and waved American flags while working the room as only he can.

Harbaugh parents will remain neutral

SANTA CLARA, Calif. (AP) — Jackie Harbaugh will wear a neutral-colored outfit, still to be determined. Her daughter, Joani Crean, little sister to coaching brothers John and Jim Harbaugh, plans to sport all black at the Super Bowl to show no allegiances whatsoever.

“I am wearing whatever fits that day,” Crean quipped.

The entire Harbaugh family — a close-knit, hyper-competitive crew that also includes Indiana basketball coach Tom Crean — realizes it has already won big. They got their Super Bowl victory on Sunday, when each coach did his part to ensure a family reunion in New Orleans next week, with John’s Baltimore Ravens facing off against Jim’s San Francisco 49ers in the first Super Bowl with sibling coaches on opposite sidelines.

One Harbaugh will haul home the Lombardi Trophy from the Big Easy.

And, no, the family members haven’t decided where to sit for the Feb. 3 NFL title game at the Superdome — or at least they aren’t revealing it if they have.

“We are neutral in the Super Bowl, and we are just excited that they have brought their teams to the pinnacle of sports,” Jackie Harbaugh said Thursday. “The Super Bowl is the ultimate accomplishment for them and for their teams and for all of the extended football family and all of the teams who have participated in this great game. We are excited for that type of thing.”

Her sons, all of 15 months apart, have tried to downplay this matchup from the moment it developed — each wanting to keep the focus on the players, on the field.

The Harbaughs have been inundated with well wishes and media requests since the moment John’s Ravens beat New England on Sunday night a few hours after the 49ers won at Atlanta. This matchup provides the storyline of storylines, one that will compete with Ravens star Ray Lewis’ last hurrah before retirement and the emergence of second-year San Francisco quarterback Colin Kaepernick (in a savvy move, he had pizza delivered to the overcrowded press trailer Thursday).

Fortunate for the Harbaugh folks, they’ve been through this once before — albeit on a slightly smaller stage: prime time on Thanksgiving night 2011. John’s Ravens won 16-6 at home. “We experienced that last year at Thanksgiving,” Jack Harbaugh said, “the thrill of victory and the agony of defeat.”

Jack visited each locker room after that game and observed the “smile on John’s face,” then headed over to see how Jim was handling it.

“It was quiet and somber, and finally I saw Jim, all by himself, no one around him,” Jack said. “He still had his coaching thing on, and his hands on his head, and we realized that that is where we were needed. . And we know we are going to experience that next week.”

For Jackie Harbaugh, who has held things together for decades and is known to offer up a sports cliché or two herself, the real celebration began last weekend.

“I felt that was a joyful moment for them, for our whole family, our extended family and for my father, who is 97 years old,” she said. “Great feeling of joy. I am going to be neutral in the game, and I know one is going to win and one is going to lose, but I would really like to end in a tie. Can the NFL do that?”

If only it could finish that way.

And don’t count on Jack doing any in-game analysis, or to start guessing which team might have the edge in any given phase.

“I’m only neutral on that,” he said. “I don’t look for body language. I am not really a coach anymore. I am a spec-long time.”

Lewis has been with the Ravens since 1996, and it wasn’t long after his arrival that he became the captain of the defense. As his career went on, he lost a step but made up for it with tireless film study and sharp instincts.

After his rookie year, the only time Lewis didn’t get a Pro Bowl invitation were those seasons when he was beset by injury — 2002, 2005 and 2012.

Last year he received his 13th Pro Bowl nod despite missing four games with a foot injury. This season, after tearing his right triceps on Oct. 14, there was a strong possibility he wouldn’t be back.

At first, the Ravens believed he was done for the year. But Lewis vowed to return, and his teammates were determined to make it happen.

“We knew we wanted to make the playoffs in order for Ray to have a chance to come back,” safety Ed Reed said.

“He’s that engine, that motor that’s going to go all the time. He understands what the offense is trying to do to you when you’re talking about tearing his right triceps on Oct. 14, there was a strong possibility he wouldn’t be back.

Since his return, Lewis has 44 tackles in three games. He isn’t limping into retirement; rather, he’s headed out with a flourish.

“He’s played really well. He’s played just like he’s always played,” coach John Harbaugh said.

Lewis attributes his involtutor and a parent. When I had the chance to watch over the weekend, all of those parents of those players that were competing and the thrill of watching their youngsters compete at that level, all of the coaches involved, their careers, how they all started out in high school and college, and now they are in the NFL and competing for this ultimate prize. I think more as a parent now than I do as a coach, and I don’t really get involved in those other things.”

Unless one of his kids tries to pull a fast one, that is.

John Harbaugh produced a little prank of his own during his parents’ NFL-organized conference call Thursday morning.

“John in Baltimore,” the moderator said, announcing the next person up for a turn to ask a question.

“Is it true that both of you like Jim better than John?” John chirped, before getting figured out fast by his sister.

Jackie had begun speaking with, “We do not.”

“Hey, John, how are you?” Joani replied.

“Is that John?” Jackie asked.

After a quick greeting, he was off to practice.

“Love you both, love you Joani,” John said.

Back to game-planning. And 3,000 miles away on a rainy day in the Bay Area, Jim, too, was busy gearing up.

San Francisco safety Donte Whitner is prepared for all the back and forth for another week.

“Oh, man, I know that they’re very proud, I know that either way they’re going to feel for the one that loses and they’re going to be happy for the other,” Whitner said. “But at the end of the day, they’re all family, and you bring a Super Bowl ring back to the family.”

untary 10-game absence as the reason behind his resurgence on the field.

“I’ve always said that anytime you can give your body a true rest — not just your body — anytime you can give your mind a certain rest from the game and from the every week wear and tear, when you come back you come back just as fresh as ever,” Lewis said. “For me right now, I feel fresh. My mind is fresh, my body is fresh and I’m just excited to really be able to end the thing up the right way.”

DISABLED

FROM 1B

There is no deadline for schools to comply with the new disabilities directive.

But activists cheered the changes.

“This is historic,” said Bev Vaughn, the executive director of the American Association of Adapted Sports Programs, a nonprofit group that works with schools to set up sports programs for students with disabilities. “It’s going to open up a whole new door of opportunity to our nation’s school children with disabilities.”

A Government Accountability Office study in 2010 found that students with disabilities participated in athletics at consistently lower rates than those without. The study also suggested the benefits of exercise among children with disabilities may be even important because they are at greater risk of being sedentary.

“We know that participation in extracurricular activities can lead to a host of really good, positive outcomes both inside and outside of the classroom,” said Kareem Dale, a White House official who guides the administration’s policies for disabled Americans.

Dale, who is blind, wrestled as a high school student in Chicago alongside students who had full vision.

“I was able to wrestle mainly because there was a good accommodation to allow me to have equal access and opportunity,” Dale said, describing modified rules that required his competitors to keep in physical contact with him during matches.

Those types of accommodations could be a model for schools and colleges now looking to incorporate students with disabilities onto sports teams. For instance, track and field officials could use a visual cue for a deaf runner to begin a race.

Some states already offer such programs. Maryland, for instance, passed a law in 2008 that required schools to create equal opportunities for students with disabilities to participate in physical education programs and play on mainstream athletic teams. And Minnesota awards state titles for disabled student athletes in six sports.

Increasingly, those with disabilities are finding spots on their schools’ teams.

“I heard about some of the other people who joined their track teams in other states. I wanted to try to do that,” said 15-year-old Casey Followay, who competes on his Ohio high school track team in a racing wheelchair.

Current rules require Followay to race on his own, without competitors running alongside him. He said he hopes the Education Department guidance will change that and he can compete against runners.

“It’s going to give me the chance to compete against kids at my level,” he said.

In cases where students with disabilities need more serious changes, a separate league could be required.

Although the letter is directed to elementary and secondary schools and the department hasn’t provided comparable guidance to colleges, some of the principles in the letter will be read closely by administrators in higher education, said Scott

Lissner, the Americans with Disabilities coordinator at Ohio State University and president of the Association on Higher Education and Disability.

“The logic that’s in there applies us to us as well as it does to K-12, for the most part,” Lissner said.

While slightly different portions of civil rights law apply to colleges and universities, “their approach in this letter was really more about the basic underlying equity and civil rights issues” that colleges also must ensure they’re applying to pass muster under the law.

Generally, Lissner said, as colleges review their policies, the effects would more likely be felt in intramural and club sports programs on campus than intercollegiate ones, Lissner said. That’s because relatively few people can meet the standards to compete in intercollegiate sports, and nothing in the guidance requires a change in such standards. But the purpose of intramural and club sports is broader, and colleges may have to do more to ensure students with disabilities aren’t deprived of a chance to compete.

Some cautioned that the first few years would bring fits and starts.

“Is it easy? No,” said Brad Hedrick, director of disability services at the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign and himself a hall-of-famer in the National Wheelchair Basketball Association. “In most places, you’re beginning from an inertial moment. But it is feasible and possible that a meaningful and viable programming can be created.”

Establishing students’ needs would be the first step, followed by training for educators and coaches.

“We need to determine how many children would qualify and then look to where kids can be integrated onto traditional teams appropriately. Where we can’t, then we need to add an adaptive program,” said Vaughn, who has advised states and districts how to be more inclusive.

“Typically, the larger school districts realistically could field a varsity and junior varsity team in each sport. In more rural areas, we would do a regional team. It’s not going to overwhelm our schools or districts. It’s just going to take some solid planning and commitment.”

Rangers, Penguins swap minor leaguer forwards

NEW YORK (AP) — The Rangers acquired forward Benn Ferriero from the Pittsburgh Penguins for forward Chad Kolarik on Thursday.

Both players have been in the American Hockey League this season. Ferriero has four goals and 14 assists in 34 games with the Wilkes-Barre/Scranton Penguins. Ferriero, chosen in the seventh round of the 2006 draft by Phoenix, has 14 goals and eight assists in 92 career NHL games over three seasons with San Jose.

Last season, he had a career-high seven goals in 35 games. Kolarik has 16 goals and 19 assists in 41 games with Connecticut this season. Also a former draft choice by Phoenix, Kolarik was acquired from Columbus on Nov. 11, 2010.

The Rangers, who play at Philadelphia on Thursday night, also recalled Kris Newbury from Connecticut earlier in the day.

Browns add linebackers, tight end coaches

CLEVELAND (AP) — Browns coach Rob Chudzinski has added assistants Brian Baker and Jon Embree to his staff.

Baker, who spent the past two seasons as defensive line coach in Dallas, will coach Cleveland’s outside linebackers. Embree, the former head coach at Colorado, will be in charge of tight ends.

Chudzinski previously worked with Baker in Carolina and praised his versatility. While he was with the Panthers, Baker helped develop defensive ends Julius Peppers and Charles Johnson. Baker spent three seasons coaching St. Louis’ defensive line before going to Carolina.

Embree coached the Buffaloes the past two years. He spent 17 years as a player and coach at the school. Embree coached Kansas City’s tight ends from 2006-08, working with perennial Pro Bowler Tony Gonzalez.

Embree spent 2010 coaching Washington’s tight ends before returning to Colorado.

Robinson adapting to new position at Senior Bowl

MOBILE, Ala. (AP) — Denard Robinson’s transition to wide receiver includes some new habits and adjustments.

The former quarterback has to get better at running routes and getting separation, but he’s not about to start tying his shoes.

During his Michigan career Robinson was known for his speed, long runs and untied shoes. All those traits have been on display heading into Saturday’s Senior Bowl — even his position coach has taken to calling him “Shoelaces.”

“A couple of offensive linemen in the huddle are like, ‘Your shoes are untied,’” Robinson said. “I thought he was playing but he was like, ‘No, seriously, your shoes are untied.’”

Robinson insists he’s not about to start tying his shoes.

However, everything else about his game is changing.

His future in the NFL won’t be as a quarterback, whether he lines up in in the Wildcat position, fields kicks or catches passes. Or all of the above.

Robinson was limited to non-contact the first two days of practice by nerve damage in his right elbow that accelerated his position switch since he finished his college career playing running back and some receiver.

He said receiver is where he wanted to be for the Senior Bowl.

North coach Dennis Allen of the Oakland Raiders said Robinson’s explosiveness and ability to run with the ball has been evident on the practice field.

His openness to learning is another positive.

“He has a lot of confidence in his ability but at the same time he understands that he doesn’t know everything that he needs to know about playing the wide receiver position,” Allen said. “But he’s very willing to learn. That’s the biggest thing, is guys understanding and being willing to put forth the effort to try to learn the position.”

Choi, Snedeker hold lead at Torrey Pines

SAN DIEGO (AP) — One week after he began his year by missing the cut, Tiger Woods didn't notice a big difference in his game.

It was everything else about the opening round at Torrey Pines that changed. Relatively calm conditions. Rough that didn't cover the top of his shoes. A course that has been good to him since he was a teenager. And despite his putter not cooperating at the end of his round, a 4-under 68 on his scorecard.

Woods was on the verge of joining defending champion Brandt Snedeker and K.J. Choi atop the leaderboard Thursday in the Farmers Insurance Open until missing three straight putts inside 12 feet late in his round.

Snedeker was bogey-free on the North Course for a 65. Choi birdied three of his last four holes on the tougher South Course for his 65.

Woods, a seven-time champion at Torrey Pines, at least got off the South Course without further damage when he had to lay up on the par-5 18th hole, hit wedge over the green and into a bunker and made a 6-foot putt for par.

"Last week's conditions were a lot more difficult and the fairways were narrow and the wind was howling," Woods said. "I felt like I was doing a lot of good things right last week — unfortunately, only for a few days, but I doing a lot of good things right. And I came out here today and basically did the same thing."

Woods three-putted for double bogey on the fourth hole, though he knew he had a pair of par 5s to make up ground. He did that, and more. He made a 12-footer for birdie, an eagle by holing a bunker shot on the par-5 sixth, and birdie putts on the eighth and ninth holes to get back into the game.

"I made a few mistakes out there, but I made some nice plays as well," Woods said.

Phil Mickelson had quite the taxing day with a 72 on the North, which played about 1¢ strokes easier than the course that hosted the U.S. Open in 2008.

Snedeker already is developing quite the love affair with this municipal course along the Pacific Bluffs. As a rookie, he was 10 under through 10 holes and had to settle for a 61 on the North Course. He finished third that year. Then, he rallied from seven shots behind in the final round, got into a playoff when Kyle Stanley made triple bogey on the 18th and won on the second play-off hole.

One year later, he was right back at it.

"It's funny, you look at all the golf courses I should play well on, this should not be one of them," Snedeker said. "This is a long, difficult golf course with lots of rough and hitting a lot of iron shots. My strength is driving and putting, so it doesn't really add up well around year. But for some reason, it's been good to me."

It was even more of a mystery for Choi.

He is not a regular at Torrey Pines and decided not to come last year until he heard from his host family in San Diego that the South Korean community wanted to see him play.

Next Life Insights

Many believe that the next life will provide the freedom they do not experience in the present incarnation. Then there are those who don't believe there will be a next life. The insightful Cancer moon suggests that in either case, it couldn't hurt to exercise freedom in this lifetime, perhaps by foregoing the need to judge what everyone believes.

ARIES (March 21-April 19).

You nearly have a clear vision of where you want to go. Soon you'll be asked to impart that that vision to others. Work on your presentation, and you'll become even more convicted.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20).

The environment you create around you gives others a hint. If you've put a great deal of care and deliberation into it, they will feel that they follow suit by bringing their best efforts to your table.

GEMINI (May 21-June 21).

The people you work with may contribute minimally to your bottom line now. And if you have a partner, don't expect much help from that person today. But don't get mad either — tomorrow everything changes.

CANCER (June 22-July 22).

With the moon in your sign you are soulful, wise and probably completely unaware of your influence on others. Because of this, people want to get close to you. Expect company.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22).

You probably feel yourself starting to let go of something you use to cling to, white-knuckle style. You're going to be a slightly different person once you drop this, and you're really ready for the change.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22).

The enjoyment of home and family may seem at odds with the pursuit of pleasure and entertainment. Instead of trying to integrate the two, decide which one is more important to you tonight and do that.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23).

You're mentally sparking on all cylinders. You'll come up with solutions that people aren't yet ready to hear. Write them down so you don't forget. Save them until you sense the timing is right.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 21).

Silence isn't golden — it's platinum. If you resist the urge to offer an opinion, judgment or information tidbit, you'll see the truth of the matter. When people are really receptive, they'll ask for help.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21).

You're so wrapped up in a certain want (or perhaps it's even boiled to the point of desire by now) that you are not seeing all the work you'll have to do to have this. Good — that would only deter you. You can do this.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19).

It's as though someone is pushing you from behind, shoving you into the exciting flow of life. You'll take action because the current way is no longer acceptable, or perhaps even bearable to you.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18).

You are in your element with the sun and planets cheering you on. All you want to do with this cosmic boost is help others. Your pure intentions will help the world.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20).

It's still too early to judge how successful a venture will be. But one thing is sure — the lost days are behind you. You've set your sights on a goal that is attainable and you've a clear map to get there too.

TODAY'S BIRTHDAY (Jan. 25).

You have a destination in mind, and the year presents a rather roundabout way of getting there, but rest assured, you will arrive. A mentor helps. Attain one in the next five weeks. You'll be accepted in a small group or make it on an important list in March. Your education pays off in June with money. Cancer and Aries adore you. Your lucky numbers are: 12, 4, 33, 19 and 41.

WEEKEND LOVE FORECAST:

ARIES: Your mind chases fantasies that seem to be spinning themselves. Reality can be even better though — take action and you'll see. TAURUS: Your loyalty will be tested. You'll never be sorry for proving your heart is true. GEMINI: You're missing something. This will affect your love life, so stop and think a moment — the missing piece will come to you. CANCER: Love isn't the first thing on your mind. You'd rather tend to other parts of life and see what happens. LEO: Tomorrow and Sunday are your time to shine. Show everyone what you can do. VIRGO: It will dawn on you — you fell for someone because of the way that person made you feel about yourself. Has that changed? LIBRA: Your family approves — not that it matters to you. But it certainly makes things easier. SCORPIO: To reach out or not to reach out? Destiny hangs in the balance. SAGITTARIUS: One honest conversation changes the game. CAPRICORN: Your desire is unswerving. You'll go straight for what you want. AQUARIUS: Someone wants to hold your helping hands. PISCES: You're too busy to worry what others think of you, which is so attractive.

Is stain set for life?

Heloise

Dear Heloise: I have shirts belonging to my 5-year-old with OILY STAINS on the front. How can I remove the stains once they have been through the dryer? — A Reader in Santa Fe, N.M.

Well, you might be able to, but since they have gone through the dryer, it might be tough. Here is what to try: First, treat the area with a pre-wash spray or stick. Then rub liquid laundry detergent onto the area until it soaks through, and wash in hot water (or the hottest water that's safe for that fabric). Rinse and air-dry. Do NOT put in the dryer. It may take two or three times.

Have other tricky stains that you need help with? I have compiled a pamphlet with all of my stain-removing hints. To order, send $5 with a long, self-addressed, stamped (66 cents) envelope to: Heloise/Stain Guide, P.O. Box 795001, San Antonio, TX 78279-5001. If the care label doesn't specify a temperature, any temperature is safe to use on that fabric, but warm water will do and will save money. — Heloise

TRAVEL HINT

Dear Heloise: When I purchase a new hair dryer, curling iron, etc., I save the old one unless it is completely unusable. I take the old ones with me when traveling and leave the new, better ones at home. This way, if I forget it on my trip, it is not a big deal — I know I still have one at home. — A Reader, via email

LETTERBOXING

Dear Readers: Have you ever heard of letterboxing? Are you looking for something fun to get your family outdoors? Letterboxing is a scavenger-hunt game. You take the clues provided and search for "hidden" letterboxes.

According to Letterboxing North America, there are around 5,000 letterboxes hidden throughout North America, many in local parks or attractions.

All you need to get started is a logbook (a blank notebook), a personal stamp (which you can make or buy), an ink pad, a pen and some clues. Once you find a box, stamp its logbook with your stamp, and stamp your logbook with its stamp. With all the boxes out there, think how many stamps you could get!

For a list of clues to boxes in your area, visit www.letterboxing.org. Grab your supplies, and let the family adventure begin! — Heloise

P.S.: A team member of Heloise Central did this with her young son and loved it. Almost free and lots of fun, plus fresh air and exercise.

GATE GUARD

Dear Heloise: The first time our new lawn-care men came to the house, they accidentally left the back gate open in the yard, and my dog got out. I drove around for a couple of hours and was lucky enough to find her. Since then, I have placed signs on both gates to the yard saying, "Please close the gate." I haven't had a problem since. — Janice in Texas

Mother worries her twin boys too close

DEAR ABBY: I am the single mother of identical twin boys. They insist on dressing alike and use their own secret language. I have always had trouble telling them apart. When they were young, it was cute, but as they are growing older I'm starting to worry.

They're 12. When they oversleep, they shower together to save time. Their teacher took me aside during a conference and said they seem to be overly affectionate with each other and might benefit from some time with a masculine role model. When I questioned her, she said there is gossip that they were seen touching and possibly even kissing.

My research has brought up the idea of "twincest," and I am worried my boys may be falling into these habits. How would you suggest making them stop? Everyone keeps suggesting separation, but they share a room and I don't have another one or the money to build one. Help! — MOM WITH TWO MUCH TROUBLE

DEAR MOM: You obviously love your boys, but please stop worrying. According to David Baron, M.D. — an internationally respected psychiatrist at the University of Southern California — at this point one of the most harmful things you could do is to blow this out of proportion. Twins have a special bond. They feel safer with each other than with their peers. If this persists, consult a therapist, for your peace of mind if nothing else. But please do not jump the gun because of gossip.

DEAR ABBY: I wear dentures. I have never gone out in public without them. However, I have seen people I know take them out in restaurants, etc. It is not only awful to look at, but don't they realize how they look? Am I shallow for not wanting anyone to see me without my "smile"? Is there some social etiquette that's being broken? — TOOTHLESS IN COLORADO

DEAR TOOTHLESS: Of course there is. The active word here is "discretion." If a dental appliance is ill-fitting and uncomfortable, it should not be left on the table or displayed like a goldfish in a glass of water for all to admire. And need I add that a trip to the dentist should be scheduled ASAP to remedy the problem?

DEAR ABBY: I'm a college student and still live with my parents. My two older sisters moved out years ago. I never asked them why, but I'm sure it's because our father is emotionally abusive. He talks down to us and makes us feel inadequate.

He has belittled my mother for years, to the point that she doesn't bother arguing with him anymore. She used to play music all the time, but she's now afraid to "bother anybody." I can honestly say I never loved my father, and I wish Mom had divorced him years ago. The few times I have tried to talk to him, he overreacted and accused me of being a drama queen who blows things out of proportion. He's almost 60 but has the emotional depth of a spoiled, angry 12-year-old. How can I convince Mom that leaving him will do her more good than harm? — NO LOVE FOR DAD IN CALIFORNIA

DEAR NO LOVE FOR DAD: You can't do that unless you fully understand her reasons for staying with your father. Women stay with abusive men for various reasons. Some of them do it because they are so emotionally beaten down they think they have no other choice. Some stay because they are financially dependent, and others do it because they are afraid of being alone. She may be biding her time until you are out of the house, or she may love your father.

Help for HHT and bleeding fingers

Dr. Keith Roach

DEAR DR. ROACH: Would you please say something about hereditary hemorrhagic telangiectasia? My fingers bleed constantly. One doctor told me just to keep a bandage over it. Others said they could not treat me. — H.L.M.

ANSWER: Hereditary hemorrhagic telangiectasia, also called Osler-Weber-Rendu syndrome, is an uncommon but not rare syndrome of abnormal blood vessels. The "hereditary" part tells us that this is a genetic disease, but at least three different genes are involved, and the variations between one person and another with this condition are very wide.

"Hemorrhagic" means bleeding — the type of bleeding you have from the fingers is common, but so are nosebleeds and bleeding internally from the GI tract. A "telangiectasia" is an abnormality of blood vessels in which arteries in the skin connect directly to veins. These can bleed much more easily than normal skin.

HHT is a condition that many doctors are unfamiliar with, and because treatment of this condition requires special expertise, it may be worthwhile to travel to an expert on the condition, someone who can help your local doctor treat you. One very helpful resource is the HHT foundation, at www.HHT.org. It has a list of the treatment centers in the U.S., Canada and internationally.

DEAR DR. ROACH: I have been taking thyroid medication for 15 years. Ten months ago, I had a normal TSH level. Last week it was slightly low. During this period I developed trigger finger on the middle digit of both hands. I went to an orthopedic surgeon, who asked if I am hypothyroid, and at the time I said no.

My question is twofold: Does the drop in my TSH signify hypothyroid? And is it possible to develop trigger finger due to hypothyroidism? My doctor said he'd never heard of it. I wondered if I should change my dosage of thyroid to see if this helps my hands, but my doctor said no. I am a potter, and my hands need to be strong to work on the wheel. — J.R.

ANSWER: Trigger finger is a condition where the tendon to the finger gets stuck in its sheath, sometimes painfully. It usually is treated by an orthopedic surgeon with an injection, although it sometimes needs surgery. Hypothyroidism does make this condition more likely, but there isn't a consensus on why it happens. Untreated hypothyroidism can cause swelling in soft tissues, and this may be the problem. A study recently showed that the antibody present in Hashimoto's thyroiditis, the most common cause of hypothyroidism, is strongly correlated with trigger finger.

You are being treated for hypothyroidism, so the correct answer to the surgeon was "Yes, and I am on replacement therapy." However, a low TSH blood test means that the thyroid replacement is greater than needed. TSH is the hormone made in your pituitary gland that tells your thyroid gland in your neck how much hormone to make. A high TSH means there's low thyroid in the blood, so the thyroid should make more. Because your TSH was slightly low, if your doctor were to make any change, it would be to slightly decrease the dose of replacement hormone.

However, it's the orthopedic surgeon who can help your hands the most.
