Fatal fire still under investigation

By MARY ANN GREIER
Staff Writer
SALEM — A fatal fire at a South Lincoln Avenue residence Friday night remains under investigation, with no criminal activity suspected, a State Fire Marshal's office spokesman said Monday.
That's not the case, however, with a fire March 15 at 654 E. Third St. which has been ruled arson, according to Michael Duchesne, Public Information Officer for the State Fire Marshal.
Duchesne said he couldn't release any details about the fire on East Third Street except that it was caused by arson. He said anyone with information about what happened that night or who may have seen anything should call the State Fire Marshal's Fire and Explosion Investigation Bureau at 1-800-589-2728.

The State Fire Marshal is working in conjunction with the Salem Fire Department and Salem Police Department on the investigation. The fire on East Third Street gutted a multi-residential home. Firefighters responded to the blaze at 11:39 p.m. March 15 and remained on the scene for several hours, with no one was injured.
Duchesne said they're awaiting the coroner's report for the fire which claimed the life of 51-year-old David Andrew Schiller of 861 S. Lincoln Ave. on Friday evening.
When firefighters arrived, a resident was outside and reported there was entrapment on the second floor. An elderly man was found wandering on the first floor and was escorted outside by firefighters.

The victim was found on the second floor and taken to Salem Regional Medical Center where he was pronounced dead, a coroner's office spokesman said.
Schiller was the son of Royal and Susan Schiller, who also resided in the home and were listed as the homeowners.
Duchesne said he didn't have any details about the cause of the fire, which remains undetermined at this point.

Crash closes U.S. 62

Above, Ohio State Highway Patrol Trooper Race Baker of the Lisbon post takes a photo while an Ohio Edison worker calls for more help on U.S. Route 62, just north of the bypass outside Salem, where this truck hauling steel coils traveled off of the side of the road and rolled over, taking a utility pole, transformer and electrical lines with it shortly after 1 p.m. Monday. The driver, Steve Lucas, of Cecil, wasn't injured, but was cited for failure to control. The Ohio Department of Transportation closed the road for several hours between the bypass and state Route 165, while tow truck operators worked to clear the scene, including Davidson of Salem. Perry Township Police and Fire Departments responded, with Goshen Township Police and Salem Police directing traffic. A deer carcass seen on the side of the road next to the truck had already been there. The accident caused an estimated 20 to 100 homes in the area, including homes on North Lincoln Avenue in Salem, to lose power for several hours as crews attempted to unravel the wires from the wreckage and restore power. Right, wires can be seen wrapped around the truck's trailer. Columbia Gas also responded. (Salem News photos by Mary Ann Greier)

Leetonia sees higher scores in Race to Top push

By KEVIN HOWELL
Staff Writer
LEETONIA— Schools Superintendent Rob Mehno Monday night updated the school board on the Race to the Top initiative's effect on the district.
Mehno told the board that the district has seen all-time highs on the local report cards issued by the state department of education each year since joining Race to the Top, improving its performance index by over five points and being commended for value added scores in the three years of the program. He did note that the graduation rate has decreased, but EMIS Director Cheryl Almy said that every school has experienced a decrease after the measurement began following students from ninth grade through graduation in four years.

In other business the board approved donations of $500 from Margaret Conrad for the Conrad Scholarship, $250 from Leetonia Eagles for the Baseball/Softball Scoreboard, $1,200 from the Columbiana County Prosecutors Office for the D.A.R.E. program, $600 from Michael Rulli for the Soccer Program, $200 from Leetonia PTO for the Jr. High Literature Fund and $50 from Diane Perkins for the Perkins/Totora Scholarship.
The board also approved donations from the Washingtonville VFW of $300 to the Baseball Supplemental Fund, $100 to the Track & Field Supplemental Fund and $100 to the Softball Supplemental Fund; from the American Legion of $200 to the Baseball Supplemental Fund, $100 to the Softball Supplemental Fund and $200 to the Track & Field Supplemental Fund; and from the Leetonia Eagles of $400 to the Baseball Supplemental Fund and $250 to the Softball Supplemental Fund.

Also at the meeting the board approved a one year lease extension to the Bears to Bee Preschool with the rental fee waived for the 2014-2015 school year. Boardmember Richard Hendricks

Attorney General's office aids county with traffic case

By TOM GIAMBRONI
Staff Writer
LISBON — For the second time in seven months, the Ohio Attorney General's Office assisted in obtaining a conviction in a Columbiana County traffic-accident case, and county Prosecutor Robert Herron is grateful for the help.
Herron said the AG's office created a special prosecutor's unit several years ago to help county prosecutors when needed, whether it be with cases requiring a particular area of expertise or other issues.
Perhaps best of all, the service is provided for free.
"It's a great resource, and we don't have to fork out money from the general fund to have a special prosecutor's office appointed (at county expense)," he said.

The latest such case occurred two weeks ago when Thomas C. Grove, 46, of Darlington, Pa., was sentenced in county Common Pleas Court to six months in prison after pleading guilty to aggravated vehicular assault. The charge stemmed from a traffic accident that occurred in Unity Township near the Pennsylvania line on Jan. 5, 2010. Grove drove left of center on state Route 14, striking head-on a vehicle being driven by Jerry Clark, 57, of New Castle, Pa. Attorneys with the AG's office served as special prosecutors in the case.

Grove was taken to the Beaver Valley Medical Center in Beaver, Pa., where a blood-alcohol test was performed. Lt. Joseph Dragovich of the Lisbon Post of the Ohio Highway Patrol said Pennsylvania's blood-alcohol standards are different than Ohio's, creating a potential interstate legal issue. Dragovich said the AG's office had just successfully prosecuted another case under similar circumstances, which is why he suggested using them.
Lisa Peterson Hackley of the AG's office said they were asked to take the case because their "lawyers have experience with issues of evidentiary admissibility in other states' blood-alcohol content analysis."

Herron said it is his understanding the AG's office frequently assists in traffic accident cases involving the state patrol because they tend to require specialized expertise.
"The purpose is to help prosecutors throughout the state," and they have assisted in almost every county, Herron said. Herron said they are currently handling two other cases that the AG's office may be asked to take.

Trooper warns more Amish on area roads

By KATIE SCHWENDEMAN
Staff Writer
LISBON — An influx of Amish from the New York state area has the highway patrol concerned for their safety on local roads.
A trooper from the Lisbon post handled a crash Sunday that involved a car versus buggy, and the 20-year-old Amish couple were taken to the Salem Regional Medical Center.
Trooper Brian Kavanagh cited Alexander Placencia, 30, of Sebring Street, East Palestine, for assured clear distance after the 2014 Chrysler 200 he was driving struck the back of the buggy while both were westbound on state Route 46 near Bye Road in Unity Township at 3:13 p.m.

Placencia was not injured but Uria N. Byler and his wife Emma Sue Byler, of Neeld Road, East Palestine, had minor injuries and the roughly 12-year-old standard breed horse driving them was put down on Monday for the injuries it sustained to its hind legs.
The posted speed limit on that road is 55 miles per hour, and Placencia was going that fast at the time of the crash, according to the report.
The impact destroyed the buggy.
Patrol Sgt. Craig Monte said the accident is the first in Columbiana County involving an Amish buggy, and he is concerned there may be more, if motorists are not paying attention.
Like others, he has heard

Today is Tuesday, April 1, the 91st day of 2014. There are 274 days left in the year. This is April Fool's Day. Ten years ago: President George W. Bush signed into law new protections for the unborn that for the first time made it a separate federal crime to harm a fetus during an assault on the mother. Five years ago: President Barack Obama, in London for an economic crisis summit, sought to rally the world's top and emerging powers to help cope with a global downturn; chanting protesters clashed with riot police in the British capital. One year ago: Prosecutors announced they would seek the death penalty for James Holmes should he be convicted in the July 2012 Colorado movie theater attack that killed 12 people.

Health law sign-ups on track to hit 7M, original target

WASHINGTON (AP) — Beating expectations, President Barack Obama's health care overhaul was on track to sign up more than 7 million Americans for health insurance on deadline day Monday, government officials told The Associated Press.

The 7 million target, thought to be out of reach by most experts, was in sight on a day that saw surging consumer interest as well as vexing computer glitches that slowed sign-ups on the HealthCare.gov website.

Two government officials confirmed the milestone, speaking on condition of anonymity because they were not authorized to discuss the matter ahead of an official announcement.

Seven million was the original target set by the Congressional Budget Office for enrollment in taxpayer-subsidized private health insurance through new online markets created under Obama's signature legislation.

That was scaled back to 6 million after the disastrous launch of HealthCare.gov last fall. Several state-run websites also had crippling problems.

Americans who rushed to apply for health insurance Monday faced long, frustrating waits and a new spate of website ills on deadline day.

"This is like trying to find a parking spot at Wal-Mart on Dec. 23," said Jason Stevenson, working with a Utah nonprofit group helping people enroll.

At times, more than 125,000 people were simultaneously using HealthCare.gov, straining it beyond its capacity. For long stretches Monday, applicants were shuttled to a virtual waiting room where they could leave an email address and be contacted later.

Officials said the site had not crashed but was experiencing very heavy volume. The website, which was receiving 1.5 million visitors a day last week, had recorded about 2 million through 3 p.m. EDT. Call centers have more than 840,000 calls.

Supporters of the health care law fanned out across the country in a final dash to sign up uninsured

Americans. People not signed up for health insurance by the deadline, either through their jobs or on their own, were subject to being fined by the IRS, and that threat was helping drive the final dash.

The administration announced last week that people still in line by midnight would get extra time to enroll.

The website stumbled early in the day — out of service for nearly four hours as technicians patched a software bug. Another hiccup in early afternoon temporarily kept new applicants from signing up, and then things slowed further. Overwhelmed by computer problems when launched last fall, the system has been working much better in recent months, but independent testers say it still runs slowly.

At Chicago's Norwegian American Hospital, people began lining up shortly after 7 a.m. to get help signing up for subsidized private health insurance.

Lucy Martinez, an unemployed single mother of two boys, said she'd previously tried to enroll at a clinic in another part of the city but there was always a problem. She'd wait and wait and they wouldn't call her name, or they would ask her for paperwork that she was told earlier she didn't need, she said. Her diabetic mother would start sweating so they'd have to leave.

She's heard "that this would be better here," said Martinez, adding that her mother successfully signed up Sunday at a different location.

At St. Francis Hospital in Wilmington, Del., enrollment counselor Hubert Worthen plunged into a long day. "I got my energy drink," he said. "This is epic, man."

At a Houston community center, there were immigrants from Ethiopia, Nepal, Eritrea, Somalia, Iraq, Iran and other conflict-torn areas, many of them trying anew after failing to complete applications previously. In addition to needing help with the actual enrollment, they needed to wait for interpreters. Many had taken a day off from work, hoping to meet the deadline.

The White House and other supporters of the law were hoping for an enrollment surge that would confound skeptics.

The insurance markets — or exchanges — offer subsidized private health insurance to people who don't have access to coverage through their jobs. The federal government is taking the lead in 36 states, while 14 other states plus Washington, D.C., are running their own enrollment websites.

New York, running its own site, reported more than 812,000 had signed up by Sunday morning, nearly 100,000 of them last week.

However, it's unclear what those numbers may mean.

The administration hasn't said how many of the 6 million people nationally who had signed up before the weekend ultimately closed the deal by paying their first month's premiums. Also unknown is how many were previously uninsured — the real test of Obama's health care overhaul. In addition, the law expands coverage for low-income people through Medicaid, but only about half the states have agreed to implement that option.

US talking with Israel on possible release of convicted spy Jonathan Pollard

JERUSALEM (AP) — The United States is talking with Israel about releasing convicted spy Jonathan Pollard early from his life sentence as an incentive to the Israelis in the troubled Mideast peace negotiations, people familiar with the talks said Monday. Releasing Pollard, a thorn in U.S.-Israeli relations for three decades, would be an extraordinary step underscoring the urgency of U.S. peace efforts.

Two people describing the talks cautioned that such a release — which would be a dramatic turnaround from previous refusals — was far from certain and that discussions with Israel on the matter were continuing. Both spoke only on condition of anonymity because they were not authorized to discuss the talks on the record.

In return for the release, the people close to the talks said, Israel would have to undertake significant concessions to the Palestinians in Middle East negotiations. Such concessions could include some kind of freeze on Israeli settlements in disputed territory, the release of Palestinian prisoners beyond those Israel has already agreed to free and a guarantee that Israel would stay at the negotiating table beyond an end-of-April deadline.

Australian leader pledges to continue Flight 370 search 'for quite some time'

PERTH, Australia (AP) — Although it has been slow, difficult and frustrating so far, the search for the missing Malaysia Airlines jet is nowhere near the point of being scaled back, Australia's prime minister said.

The three-week hunt for Flight 370 has turned up no sign of the Boeing 777, which vanished March 8 with 239 people bound for Beijing from Kuala Lumpur. Ten planes and 11 ships found no sign of the missing plane in the search zone in the southern Indian Ocean, about 1,850 kilometers (1,150 miles) west of Australia, officials said.

The search area has evolved as experts analyzed Flight 370's limited radar and satellite data, moving from the seas off Vietnam, to the waters west of Malaysia and Indonesia, and then to several areas west of Australia. The search zone is now 254,000 square kilometers (98,000 square miles), about a 24-hour flight from Perth.

Malaysia has been criticized for its handling of the search, particularly its communications to the media and the family. In something likely to fuel those concerns, the government changed its account of the final voice transmission from the cockpit. In a statement late Monday, it said the final words received by ground controllers at 1:19 a.m. on March 8 were "Good night Malaysian three-seven-zero." Earlier the government said the final words were "All right, good night." The statement didn't explain or address the discrepancy. The statement also said investigators were still trying to determine whether the pilot or co-pilot spoke the words.

Washington governor says losses from mudslide reach $10M; death toll at 24

DARRINGTON, Wash. (AP) — Estimated financial losses from the deadly Washington mudslide that has killed at least 24 people have reached $10 million, Gov. Jay Inslee said Monday in a letter asking the federal government for a major disaster declaration.

In seeking additional federal help following one of the deadliest landslides in U.S. history, Inslee said about 30 families need assistance with housing, along with personal and household goods. The estimated losses include nearly $7 million in structures and more than $3 million in their contents, Inslee's letter said.

The Snohomish County medical examiner's office said Monday afternoon that it has received a total of 24 victims, and 18 of those have been positively identified. Previously, the official death toll was 21, with 15 victims identified.

The remains of three additional victims were found Monday, but they have not yet been included in the medical examiner's official numbers, Snohomish County Executive Director Gary Haakenson told reporters at a Monday evening briefing.

The county sheriff's office released a list Monday evening of 22 people believed missing following the March 22 slide that destroyed a rural mountainside community northeast of Seattle. That's down from the 30 people officials previously considered missing.

Russia pulls back battalion from Ukraine; Medvedev promises aid for Crimea

SIMFEROPOL, Crimea (AP) — Russia said Monday it was pulling a battalion of several hundred troops away from the Ukrainian border but kept tens of thousands in place, prompting a worried response from the Kiev government about what the U.S. warned was still a "tremendous buildup." Russia moved quickly to strengthen its economic hold on Crimea, with Prime Minister Dmitry Medvedev arriving in the newly annexed peninsula with promises of funds for improved power supplies, water lines, education and pensions for the elderly.

Russia's takeover of the strategic Black Sea region, its troop buildup near Ukraine's border and its attempts to compel constitutional changes in Ukraine have markedly raised tensions with the West and prompted fears that Moscow intends to invade other areas of its neighbor.

However, Russian President Vladimir Putin told German Chancellor Angela Merkel in a phone call Monday that some troops were being withdrawn from the Ukraine border, Merkel's office said. The withdrawal involved a battalion of about 500 troops, Russian news reports said.

The U.S. reacted cautiously to the Russian troop movement, with Secretary of Defense Chuck Hagel saying that "tens of thousands" of Russian forces still remained along the Ukrainian border, a situation he called "a tremendous buildup."

Police: Body found in park believed to be that of murder suspect seen with girl

WASHINGTON (AP) — The body of a man found dead in a park of an apparent suicide Monday is believed to be that of a murder suspect who was the last person seen with a missing 8-year-old girl, police said.

The body has been tentatively identified as that of Kahlil Tatum, 51, a janitor at the city homeless shelter where 8-year-old Relisha Rudd had been living with her family, said Washington Police Chief Cathy Lanier.

"It appears the person we found here today was, in fact, Mr. Tatum, and it does still appear at this point that this was a suicide," Lanier told a news conference at the park.

Soda sales declining at faster pace in US

NEW YORK (AP) — Americans cut back on soda at an accelerated pace last year, extending a slow retreat from the category that began nearly a decade ago.

U.S. sales volume of carbonated soft drinks fell 3 percent in 2013, according to a report released Monday by Beverage Digest, an industry tracker. That represents a steeper drop than the 1.2 percent decline in 2012 and brings total soda volume to the lowest level since 1995.

The latest numbers underscore the daunting challenge Coca-Cola Co. and PepsiCo Inc. face in turning around the category, despite their plans to intensify marketing and introduce versions of their flagship sodas made with natural, low-calorie sweeteners.

While carbonated soft drinks still represent the biggest category in the beverage industry, alternatives such as energy drinks and flavored waters have slowly chipped away at the popularity of longtime favorites like Coke, Pepsi and Dr Pepper.

Soda's image has also taken a beating, with public health advocates blaming it for fueling weight gain.

Even diet sodas are suffering. Last year, for instance, sales volume for Diet Coke and Diet Pepsi suffered steeper declines than their full-calorie counterparts.

"The carbonated category is in need of innovation and innovation quickly," said John Sicher, publisher of Beverage Digest.

Industry executives blame the trend in diet sodas on worries people have about artificial sweeteners. But newer, smaller brands made with artificial sweeteners, such as Sparkling Ice by TalkingRain, have enjoyed strong growth.

Overall, Coca-Cola Co. fared better than rival PepsiCo and saw its soda volume fall 2.2 percent, according to the Beverage Digest. In addition to its namesake soda, Coca-Cola owns Sprite and Fanta.

PepsiCo Inc., which makes Mountain Dew, saw volume fall 4.4 percent. That was despite the company's stepped up marketing for Pepsi, including sponsorship of the Super Bowl halftime show for the past two years.

Overall, the declines in the soda category mean that 1.2 billion cases have been wiped from the industry since 1995. Each case represents 192 ounces.

Coke remains the top soda brand, followed by Diet Coke at No. 2, Pepsi at No. 3 and Mountain Dew at No. 4. The only new brand in the top 10 was Coke Zero, which displaced Diet Dr Pepper.

Coca-Cola and PepsiCo both make an array of other beverages, including bottled water, orange juice and sports drinks. But sodas still account for a large and lucrative portion of their businesses.

Dan Schafer, a spokesman for Coca-Cola, said the Atlanta company was "committed to returning our overall sparkling business to growth in the U.S."

A representative for PepsiCo, Dave DeCecco, noted that the company's portfolio includes several leading beverages in growth categories, such as Gatorade in sports drinks and Lipton in bottled teas. The company, based in Purchase, N.Y., has noted that it is less dependent on soda sales than rival Coca-Cola.

According to court documents and sheriff’s reports, Kelly ran off the road, hit speeds as high as 75 mph, ran another vehicle off the road, went right through a stop sign at Carmel Achor and Sprucevale Road and drove twice through the Rogers Elementary School lot at a high rate of speed nearly striking two vehicles.

Kelly then allegedly pulled into a cemetery and allowed his passenger to exit before continuing on into the back of the cemetery. He stopped there and went running off into the woods on foot. Deputies reportedly later found him on state Route 7 south of Rogers.

OUR SIDE

Strickland a good fit for new job

Ted Strickland is not an individual who likes to sit idle. The Lucasville native has scripted an impressive career, much of which is steeped in the political realm.

Strickland's most recent, and possibly, final political stop was that as Ohio governor. He lost his re-election bid to current Gov. John Kasich.

Despite that election defeat, Strickland remains in high regard in political circles. Moreover, his reputation as a man of character is unquestioned.

Strickland's body of work has landed him a new challenge. He will become president of the Center for American Progress Action Fund today.

In that role, he will promote liberal causes in his home state and across the country as the new head of the Washington think tank's advocacy arm. Strickland appears an ideal fit for the position.

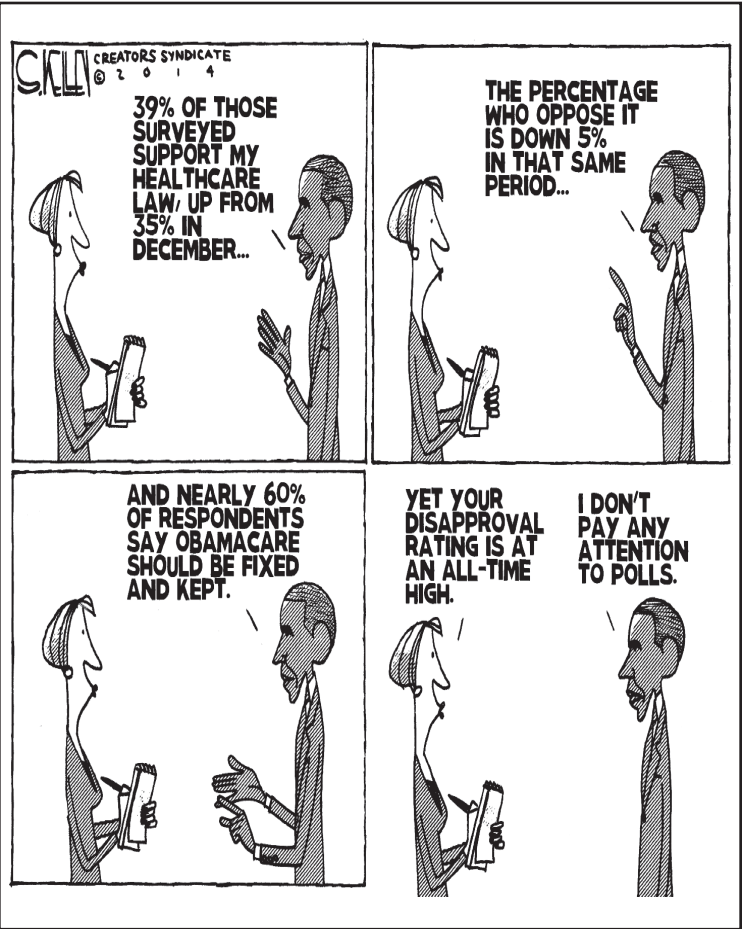

His new post will include blogging, fundraising and traveling around the country talking about causes such as minimum-wage increases, immigration reform, pay equity, workers' rights, abortion rights and gay marriage.

Strickland owns a divinity degree. That educational background will be well served as he promotes "policies that are good for average working families."

Strickland will be impacting a large audience. He will oversee a website that sees more than 6 million hits a month, fueled by a $7 million budget. Moreover, he will direct a research-drive "war-room."

"It will give me the opportunity outside of elective office to work on the things I care about and to be in some ways even more effective than I was able to be as an officeholder," Strickland said.

Strickland's success as a governor can be debated. However, his character and compassion are above reproach. He is well-suited to capably lead the Center for American Progress Action Fund.

Just trust Verizon: Two-track minds on security and privacy

The first shocking headlines after Malaysia Airlines Flight 370 disappeared revealed that two men had boarded with stolen passports. "Stark evidence of security gap," blared The Christian Science Monitor.

It appears that illegal immigration, not terrorism, was the two Iranians' intention. But media and governments across the globe shook their heads wildly that an airport security system had failed to check an international database for stolen passports.

In this country, a state-issued driver's license is considered adequate identification for boarding a flight. Recall that following the attacks of Sept. 11, 2001, Congress passed the Real ID Act to require states to issue counterfeit-proof driver's licenses for this purpose.

Recall also that a coalition of conspiracy addicts (on the left and right) and privacy crusaders called Real ID an assault on our civil liberties. Imagine, the government taking away the right to impersonate others. It should have been a zero-brainer that without secure driver's licenses, airport officials would have no idea who was boarding a plane.

Arguments leveled against Real ID are being recycled to bash the National Security Agency's surveillance program. They inevitably lead to the assumption that the government is up to no good.

Now, one cannot vouch for the wisdom of every aspect of the NSA program to collect metadata on Americans' communications. There's always risk of abuse, and the agency hasn't always been straightforward about what it does.

But the easily stoked hysteria over a program designed to stop terrorist attacks reflects two facts: One is that most people don't know what metadata is. (It's the numbers you dial, length of calls, email correspondence -- not the content of these communications.) The other is that the United States hasn't been subject to a major terrorist outrage in some time.

Back to Real ID. In 2008, the Electronic Privacy Information Center issued a 33-page report accusing government of pushing the secure driver's license as a sneaky way to create a national ID card. (The belief is that such cards, common in Europe, are evil.)

Among EPIC's concerns, existing technology would enable the driver's licenses to also store credit card, library card and health care card data. There is a difference between being able to do something and legally doing it. Technology could let licenses also store pictures of naked babies. That doesn't mean it would be so used.

EPIC complained that Real ID is not voluntary -- that is, residents of states that don't comply would be inconvenienced. Yeah, they wouldn't be able to get on planes with fake IDs.

The NSA foes talk about government's collecting "massive" amounts of data, when the concern should be on what, not how much. Would you prefer that the computers just comb through the communications of certain immigrant groups?

Of course, one may infer some personal details from numbers dialed. Some tea party types have fretted that the feds might go after members calling groups opposed to Obamacare. Like the NSA cares.

In EPIC's defense, the advocacy group also takes private companies to task for grabbing data, though not with nearly the same passion it directs at government. Which takes us to the fact that the super-personal information that privacy obsessives don't want in the computers of the NSA is already in the computers of the phone company. You can always trust Verizon, right?

President Obama's proposed change would have the phone companies store the data, which they already do. The NSA could review an individual's record with a court order.

It's not very fashionable to support such programs right now. But if -- or rather when -- another major terrorist attack occurs, the conversation will rapidly turn.

Limits of power in the Nuclear Age

Two current news stories underscore how the world of power politics has changed since the darkest days of the Cold War, when the threat of nuclear Armageddon hung over the globe.

The first is President Obama's acknowledgment that there is, in his words, no "military solution" to the Russian invasion and annexation of Crimea. His statement in one stroke lifted the once-terrifying cloud of a nuclear exchange between the United States and the Russian empire. His remarks in Brussels confirmed that such a catastrophe is today "unthinkable."

The second story is that 92 Air Force officers manning intercontinental ballistic missiles at a nuclear arsenal in Montana have been relieved of duty for cheating on readiness tests. Morale at Malmstrom Air Force Base was so low, presumably out of lack of promotion possibilities, that the officers conspired among themselves to leak test questions and assure the highest scores.

These once-heralded guardians of freedom have become largely forgotten watchdogs in an around-the-clock exercise of another era, when the threat of what was called a policy of MAD -- for mutual assured destruction -- kept the world hanging on a thin thread. Indeed, the huge cost of maintaining 450 Minuteman III ICBMs, along with a settled recognition that they are unlikely ever to be used, has brought talk of sharp cutbacks.

In a sense, the development is a triumph of rationality over fear, for the time being at least. Generations of Americans are too young to recall the earliest days of the development of long-range nuclear weapons and the arms race between the two major powers in the post-World War era. They missed the massive mind inoculation of such a threat in the American culture of the time.

Schoolchildren were obliged to practice classroom drills of ducking for cover under their desks at the ringing of a bell. The Pentagon promoted the construction of basement "fallout shelters" of thick concrete blocks offering questionable shielding against lethal nuclear ashes that would rain down for miles in such an exchange.

As a reporter at that time, in a place considered by some to be "ground zero" for such a Russian attack, and as the father of three small children, I laboriously built one myself in the basement of my rambler in Virginia not far from the Pentagon. Debate swirled over the moral imperative of welcoming neighbors in.

In the best-selling 1962 novel "Fail-Safe," and in the subsequent movie of the same title, an American nuclear bomber flies past the point of no recall, obliging the American president, played by Henry Fonda, to negotiate with Soviet leader Nikita Khrushchev, whereby a U.S. bomber targets New York when Moscow is destroyed. It was realistic and chilling.

Another movie, "Dr. Strangelove," humorous for the most part but ultimately unsettling, cast George C. Scott as a crazed American general and Peter Sellers in dual roles as the American president and a mad science adviser. It ends with the U.S. pilot, cowboy-like, straddling a nuke and riding it down to oblivion as if it were a bucking bronco into a huge mushroom cloud.

All this may seem sheer fantasy to young eyes that did not witness those years when the possibility of a nuclear exchange was taken seriously. The fear briefly was real enough during the 1962 Cuban Missile Crisis, when Soviet missiles were discovered 90 miles from Florida. Only 11th-hour negotiations between President John F. Kennedy and Khrushchev averted the calamity.

It was a dash of cold water that in the end drove home anew the folly and futility of nuclear war. Half a century later, President Obama, faced with the Russian grab of Crimea, has been able to declare there is no military solution, with considerable sober concurrence at home, despite conservatives' wails over the weakness in the Oval Office.

Obama's response, rallying Western allies and the European Union to impose strong economic sanctions on Russian President Vladimir Putin and his business-partner "cronies," is a recognition of maturity in the power game of the new century.

OTHER VOICES

March 24

The Kansas City (Mo.) Star on federal health care insurance:

It's down to the wire, folks. Under the new federal health care law, March 31 is the deadline for signing up for health insurance, either through the federal marketplace, HealthCare.gov., or from a private insurer.

If you aren't insured through an employer, or don't already have an individual policy, you have compelling reasons to act quickly ...

... Going uninsured will cost you. The law requires a tax penalty for remaining uncovered. Depending on your income, you could end up paying anywhere from $95 as a single adult to as much as $10,150. A single person whose modified adjusted gross income is $35,000 a year would be liable for a $249 penalty. And you get nothing for your money ...

Yes, Obamacare has been controversial. But it is the law, and millions of Americans are benefiting from it.

Even critics appreciate the law's consumer protections, especially a prohibition against insurers refusing affordable policies to consumers with pre-existing health conditions. And the only way to guarantee affordable coverage to sick people is to recruit healthy people into the insurance pool ... Unfortunately, signing up for insurance on the federal exchange, HealthCare.gov, isn't as simple as officials initially promised. It's especially tricky for people who aren't computer-savvy.

Projects at fairgrounds to get underway

By STEVE RAPPACH
Staff Writer

LISBON — Two major projects at the Columbiana County Fairgrounds may be underway shortly.

The fair board has been discussing plans for construction of the grandstand and a new pedestrian bridge from the north end of the fairgrounds.

“I don’t know too much about when exactly they will start,” grandstand committee co-chairman Robin Houlette said. “We have Dant Clayton getting ready to work, and once we get state approval, they’ll get started.”

Dant Clayton Corp. of Louisville, Ky. was selected by the fair board to construct the new grandstand following the demolition of the 160-year-old original wooden grandstand Dec. 14.

After crews worked to clean up and smooth out the land for the past three months, Dant Clayton now looks to lay down the first pillars to build the grandstand.

“The site is ready for construction,” Houlette said. “Hoping that the weather will cooperate, they can go ahead and get to work.”

Houlette noted, however, that state approval will be needed before construction begins, but he and the rest of the fair board hopes to hear approval soon.

“Hopefully if we get word about it ... we can start work either in the middle or the end of April,” Houlette said. “There are lots of people who are anxious for this project and have been helpful in making this happen.”

Houlette’s fellow committee chairman, Paul Lease, also expressed delight in anticipation of the long-awaited project.

“There’s not one person who is not ecstatic about it,” Lease said. “This is one of the biggest projects that we have ever undertaken in the fair’s history, maybe the biggest. I’m so excited about this. This is going to be a phenomenal feat.”

Another major project in sight is construction of a new pedestrian walkway at the north end of the fairgrounds.

The steel-arch bridge that formerly sat over Little Beaver Creek in downtown Lisbon will start at the north end of the campgrounds and will end at the ravine near the turkey barn, serving as a much easier entrance for campers as well as those entering the fair from Saltwell Road.

“The walkway will start at the north end of the parking lots,” Houlette said. “Everyone that comes from Saltwell Road will be able to use the bridge. It will be a lot easier on people, especially as they leave.”

The bridge once sat on South Market Street and spanned the Middle Fork of Little Beaver Creek for over a century before it was replaced by a concrete span in the 1960s. Then, county Engineer Bert Dawson came up with plans to use the bridge for over 20 years. In the end, he decided on a walkway at the fairgrounds.

“Bert was able to put a lot of bids up, and has been able to raise all this money for this to happen,” Houlette said. “That bridge was taken down about 40 years ago, and Bert felt that the best place for that was at the fairgrounds.”

The bridge was originally planned to be built for the 2013 fair, but additional testing requests from the Environmental Protection Agency pushed back the bridge’s construction to this year. Now it appears the bridge will join the grandstand in a new, important year for the fair.

“The bridge has been dismantled, and it is being refurbished now in Cambridge,” Lease said. “If everything works out, it’s going to be awesome.”

Lisbon tax chief retiring

By TOM GIAMBRONI
Staff Writer

LISBON — The village is looking for someone to run the income tax office due to the impending retirement of income tax administrator Richard Martin.

Martin, 66, recently announced his intention to retire as of May 30 after holding the council-appointed full-time job for the past 10 years.

“Basically, it’s because of changes in PERS and (health) insurance,” he said of his decision to retire now. He was referring to changes in the state pension and retirement health insurance programs (PERS) that will result in reduced benefits for government employees in Ohio who choose to delay retirement.

“If I waited, it would have hurt me,” Martin said.

As administrator, he is in charge of collecting the 1.5 percent income tax assessed by the village, which generates a little more than $1 million a year and is the largest source of general fund income.

There had been talk in recent years about the state legislature passing a law abolishing income tax collections at the local level and making it a function of state government, but Martin believes it is important to have a staffed office in Village Hall where residents and people who work within the village can come seeking answers to questions or help in filling out their tax form.

The notice seeking applicants for the job vacancy was posted Sunday. Applications will be taken until April 11.

Martin and his wife have two daughters, one of whom lives in Arizona. Although they have no immediate plans, he said they may travel a bit more.

Man sentenced for theft in 2005

By DEANNE JOHNSON
Staff Writer

LISBON — A man accused of stealing from someone he was working for in 2005 was sentenced Monday to 90 days in jail by Columbiana County Common Pleas Court Judge C. Ashley Pike.

Assistant County Prosecutor Tammie Riley Jones said Dale C. Milnes, 51, Wheathill Road, East Palestine, was working in March 2005 for Michaela Nicotera and used an AT&T Universal Platinum Mastercard belonging to Nicotera to make several purchases for home improvement items. Without Nicotera’s permission, Milnes reportedly shopped at Kmart, Walmart, Lowe’s, Toys R Us, Splash and Shine Auto and Target.

Speaking before sentencing, Milnes said he barely remembers the crimes of theft and in his condition he said he does not plan to commit any additional crimes. He added every time he is incarcerated it is difficult for him. Still, he offered to make restitution.

His defense attorney, Jennifer Gorby, pointed out Milnes has cirrhosis of the liver and hepatitis, and needed a week to get his medications together before he goes to the county jail. He was credited with 38 days served, leaving him with 52 to serve.

While Pike said the length of time since the crime occurred and Milnes previous criminal records were of concern to him, he also said he was concerned about Milnes health. He ordered Milnes to stay out of trouble while on probation following his jail sentence and contact Nicotera about making restitution within 15 days of his release of prison.

“I hope you prove me wrong,” Pike said. “I don’t have a great deal of confidence in you so I hope you prove me wrong.”

Student tests cattle feed for Career Center project

By DEANNE JOHNSON
Staff Writer

LISBON — When farmers choose what to feed their young cattle there are a lot of choices. One student in the Columbiana County Career and Technical Center’s Veterinary Science Technology program decided to test two such products as part of her senior project.

Darrell Bevelhymmer, who has taught the class for eight years, went over Whitney Stear’s project with the CTC board. All seniors at the career center are expected to complete a senior project, presented in early March.

Stear, who comes to the CTC from Crestview, conducted a feed trial. She took two feeder calves born on the same day, began feeding them the same whole milk for the same amount of time and then began them on two different types of pellets on the same date to see how well the calves would do on the two types of feed, checking them along the way for weight gain and muscle make up. The idea is to determine which steer will produce the best meat.

An employee at Unkefer Dairy, Stear managed to pay for all her own feed to care for her two calves. She began planning her senior project the summer before and Bevelhymmer held the project up as an example of the type of work he likes to see from his students, who he gets to work with their junior and senior years of high school. Each class has between 17 and 20 students, who get hands on experience with animals and technology equipment, participate in Future Farmers of America and learn many aspects of veterinarian care, as well as the people skills veterinarian offices are looking for in new employees.

Bevelhymmer said students do not always realize all the opportunities available to them when they begin working with animals and learn to deal with people who care about animals. A project like the senior project helps students see just what they can achieve.

He is also working with different programs to try to get more credits for his students or a jump toward more technical and college programs. He brings back some graduates of the program to help students see just what they have the potential to achieve.

As for Stear, Bevelhymmer said she is planning to go to the Ohio State Agricultural Technical Institute in Wooster next year, studying animal nutrition and agricultural engineering.

Man killed, 3 hurt in Amish buggy crash

BURTON (AP) — A man driving an SUV was drunk and speeding when he slammed into the back of a buggy carrying an Amish family on a dark road in northeastern Ohio, killing one person and injuring three others, the State Highway Patrol said.

Joseph Byler, 28, died at a Cleveland hospital following the crash at about 9 p.m. Sunday near Burton in Geauga County, the patrol said. His 23-year-old sister, Irene; 19-year-old sister, Alma; and 50-year-old mother, Esther, were all taken to hospitals for treatment but are expected to survive.

The father, Eli Byler, who was driving the buggy, refused treatment at the scene.

shut off because of a venting problem. The resident was told to make needed repairs.

LISBON

FROM 1A

Amish families from New York are turning to this area to get away from stricter regulations among their sect.

“All indications are the Amish community in Columbiana County is going to continue to grow,” he said.

The families are mainly choosing the Rogers, East Palestine and Negley areas, he added.

Middleton Township Fiscal Officer Bob Chapman said at the latest township meeting more Amish are being seen in the area, and that they are mostly from New York. He had also heard it was due to the regulations there.

Township Trustee Nancy Michaels said some Amish have lived on state roads just outside the township for the last couple of years, but more are now taking up residence in the township on Pioneer and Millrock roads.

The township recently purchased four Amish buggy road signs that will be posted on those roads to warn drivers to be on the lookout while traveling through. The signs cost $68 a piece.

Monte said signs have also been posted by the Ohio Department of Transportation on state roads.

Micheals said signs have been up for a few years on state Routes 7 and 154 in Rogers.

“Just be aware, if you see a sign up, just watch out for them,” she said.

Monte said drivers should share the road with the Amish with courtesy, respect and understanding.

“Amish buggies have every legal right to be on the the roadway. Have a knowledge that these Amish buggies are on the roadways,” he said.

While most buggies stay closer to the edgeline in order to make room for vehicle traffic, they often don’t have much leeway for moving over, he added.

“Roads in this part of the county have steep hills, crests and sharp, hairpin curves,” he said.

All buggies are required to display the orange triangle identifying them as slow moving vehicles and front and back lights, he said, but the sign and lights can’t always be seen when it comes to hills and curves.

Motorists should assume a buggy could be over a hill or around a corner and proceed with caution.

“Use extreme caution with the unknown,” he said.

Patrol Sgt. Ian Roberts of the Wooster post in Wayne County said motorists should never do anything that may spook a horse driving a buggy. Honking horns, yelling or making other loud noises should be avoided at all costs.

Monte reached out to Roberts for advice on how to deal with the growing Amish population from a road safety standpoint since Wooster has a heavy Amish population.

Monte said he hopes once more people are aware of Amish using local roads future accidents will be avoided.

GM recalls 1.5M cars for steering defect

DETROIT (AP) — General Motors Co. said Monday it is recalling 1.5 million vehicles worldwide because the electronic power-steering assist can suddenly stop working, making them harder to steer.

The new recall brings to 6.3 million the number of vehicles GM has recalled since February. The initial recall — now at 2.6 million small cars for an ignition switch defect — prompted the automaker to name a new safety chief and speed up the review of cases that might lead to recalls.

The recall includes Chevrolet Malibu, Malibu Maxx, Chevrolet HHR, Chevrolet Cobalt, Saturn Aura, Saturn Ion and Pontiac G6. Model years vary, but all of the vehicles are from the 2010 model year or earlier.

GM recall: Many victim young drivers

DETROIT (AP) — As the deaths are tallied from General Motors' recall, one thing is becoming clear — the majority of those killed were young.

Low-priced cars like the Chevrolet Cobalt and Saturn Ion were marketed to young, first-time buyers but price may not be the only reason. The faulty ignition switches behind the recall can shut off the engine while the car is in motion, causing loss of power-assisted steering and power brakes. Safety experts say inexperienced drivers are more likely to panic and be overwhelmed in those situations by the extra effort needed to control the car.

GM has linked 13 deaths to the problem. Others have a higher total, with the majority of victims under age 25.

Yellen: Job market needs low rates

WASHINGTON (AP) — Federal Reserve Chair Janet Yellen made clear Monday that she thinks the still-subpar U.S. job market will continue to need the help of low interest rates for some time.

Yellen's remarks signaled that even after the Fed phases out its monthly bond purchases later this year, it has no plans to raise a key short-term rate anytime soon. The bond purchases have been intended to keep long-term loan rates low.

Her remarks reassured investors, many of whom had grown anxious that the Fed might raise short-term rates by mid-2015. An increase would elevate borrowing costs and could hurt stock prices. But on Monday, Yellen indicated that the Fed still thinks rates should remain low to stimulate borrowing, spending and economic growth.

Eurozone inflation drop adds pressure

BRUSSELS (AP) — After breaking out of recession and taming its financial crisis, Europe now faces a new kind of economic threat — deflation. A protracted drop in prices could snuff out growth for years. And new data released Monday showed the inflation rate fell in March to its lowest level since the 2008-2009 global financial crisis, a sign of economic weakness that piles fresh pressure on the European Central Bank to further ease its monetary policies this week.

The steady decline, the third in as many months, raises concerns that consumer prices may start to fall outright, creating a downward spiral that chokes off economic growth.

Senator: Caterpillar avoided billions in tax

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Carl Levin says manufacturing giant Caterpillar Inc. has used an aggressive tax strategy to shift profits overseas in order to avoid paying billions in U.S. taxes.

The Michigan Democrat chairs the Senate Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations. The committee's Democratic staff said in a report released Monday that Caterpillar avoided paying $2.4 billion in U.S. taxes since 2000 by shifting profits to a wholly-controlled affiliate in Switzerland.

The report raises questions about the validity of the tax strategy but does not accuse the Peoria, Ill.-based manufacturer of breaking the law.

The company said that it complies with all tax laws and pays an effective income tax rate of 29 percent, among the highest for multinational manufacturers.

Swiss name 8 banks in manipulation probe

GENEVA (AP) — Switzerland's competition regulator on Monday named eight global banks it is investigating for possible manipulation of foreign exchange rates.

The move is the latest twist in an investigation by regulators in the U.S., Europe and Asia on whether major banks colluded to manipulate the trillion-dollar foreign exchange market.

The Swiss Competition Commission is scrutinizing the two largest Swiss banks, UBS and Credit Suisse, along with Zurich Cantonal Bank, Julius Baer and JP Morgan Chase, Citigroup, Barclays Bank and Royal Bank of Scotland Group.

The alleged coordination may include the exchange of confidential information, transactions with other market participants at agreed price levels and coordinated actions to influence a foreign exchange benchmark.

Exxon: Highly unlikely fossil fuels limited

NEW YORK (AP) — Exxon Mobil says that global policies to combat climate change won't be strict enough to stop the company from selling all of the oil and gas it has found — and all that it will find in the foreseeable future. It says the fuels are too important for global economic development.

Exxon issued a report Monday on the risks that climate change policies could pose to the company's assets and future profitability in response to shareholder concerns.

The report, the first detailed response to these concerns by a major oil company, says governments are "highly unlikely" to adopt policies that sharply cut emissions because they would choke economic growth.

J&J accepts offer for diagnostics unit

NEW BRUNSWICK, N.J. (AP) — Johnson & Johnson has accepted an roughly $4 billion offer from the private equity firm The Carlyle Group to buy its Ortho-Clinical Diagnostics business. The New Brunswick, N.J., health care giant said Monday that the deal should close by mid-year.

J&J said in January that Carlyle had offered $4.15 billion for the business, and that it would talk to works councils and trade unions representing its employees before making a decision.

Lufthansa cancels 3,800 flights due to strike

BERLIN (AP) — Germany's Lufthansa will cancel some 3,800 flights because of a three-day strike by the pilots' union later this week, hitting more than 425,000 passengers.

The cancellations include domestic and intercontinental connections Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, the airline said Monday. A union representing pilots at Lufthansa called for the strike last week in a long-running pay dispute.

Though the strike starts Wednesday, some Tuesday flights have been canceled for logistical reasons.

NHTSA to require rearview cameras in new vehicles

WASHINGTON (AP) — Years later, the Transportation Department issued a rule Monday that will require rearview technology in all new cars and many light trucks — an effort to reduce deaths and serious injuries caused by backup accidents.

The final rule issued by the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration will require all new vehicles under 10,000 pounds and built beginning May 1, 2018, to meet the new rear-visibility standards. The rule includes buses and trucks; motorcycles and trailers are exempt.

The rearview cameras can be mounted anywhere many different parts of the vehicle, including a license plate. They must give drivers a field of vision measuring at least 10 by 20 feet directly behind the vehicle. The system must also meet other requirements including dashboard image size, lighting conditions and display time.

Backup accidents involving light vehicles cause an average of 210 deaths and 15,000 injuries a year, and victims often are children and the elderly, the government said. Children under 5 years old account for 31 percent of the deaths each year, while adults 70 years of age and older represent about 26 percent.

NHTSA said the new rule, required in the Cameron Gulbransen Kids Transportation Safety Act, will save between 13 to 15 lives per year and prevent as many as 1,125 injuries annually. The measure, signed into law in 2008, was named for a 2-year-old Long Island boy whose pediatrician father backed over him in their driveway in 2002.

Although Congress passed the measure with strong bipartisan backing, delays in researching and writing the rules pushed the federal mandate past a number of deadlines. Critics charged that the government was reluctant to put additional financial burdens on the auto industry already crippled by an economic downturn, even though some manufacturers had started to install rearview technologies like sensor systems. In the United States, 44 percent of 2012 models came with rear cameras standard, and 27 percent had them as options, according to the automotive research firm Edmunds.

"This day has been a long time coming, and we urge automakers to move quickly to beat the 2018 deadline," said Ellen Bloom, senior director of federal policy at Consumers Union.

The government estimates that a rearview system will cost between $132 and $142 per vehicle. For vehicles that already have a dashboard display screen, upgrading it to comply with the rule will cost less, about $43 each.

Compliance will be phased in by manufacturers starting in May 2016, before it becomes mandatory two years later.

"Today's decision will save lives and save money for consumers," said Jackie Gillan, president of Advocates for Highway and Auto Safety. "Every make and model will be required to meet this new safety standard and every family will benefit."

Researchers at the University of California, Irvine, started looking into the problem in the 1990s after noticing toddlers showing up in hospital databases of injured child pedestrians — many of them hurt or killed by vehicles backing out of home driveways. In 1993, the NHTSA sponsored several studies that noted the disproportionate effect of backup accidents on child victims. One report explored sensors and cameras as possible solutions, noting the accidents "involve slow closing speeds and, thus, may be preventable."

Walker’s homer lifts Pirates over Cubs

By WILL GRAVES
Associated Press

PITTSBURGH — Pittsburgh Pirates second baseman Neil Walker understands not everybody is going to be a fan of Major League Baseball’s expanded replay system, which threatens to slow down a sport that already struggles to be played with any sort of urgency.

Funny, there weren’t many critics to be found on Monday at PNC Park.

Walker homered off Carlos Villanueva leading off the 10th inning, and the Pirates benefited from an overturned call to beat the Chicago Cubs 1-0.

The Pittsburgh native turned on a Villanueva changeup and sent it sailing over the Clemente Wall in right field for the first walk-off of his career and the first by the Pirates on opening day since Bob Bailey homered off San Francisco’s Juan Marichal in a 1-0, 10-inning victory in 1965.

“This one feels pretty special,” Walker said. “This is a special day for this team, this organization. We’ve come a long way.”

So has the game.

After spending decades fighting the advances of technology, Major League Baseball has embraced the concept. Many calls can be challenged this season under an expanded system, and both teams wasted little time putting umpires to work.

The Cubs made history by initiating the first review under the new guidelines. Chicago manager Rick Renteria challenged a double-play call in the top of the fifth following a demonstrative “safe” call by Jeff Samardzija following a poorly executed sacrifice bunt attempt. First base umpire Bob Davidson’s decision was confirmed on replay.

“It was a combination of Samardzija’s reaction and what we were looking at,” Renteria said. “We’re still trying to figure out what clear and compelling evidence is. It’s a work in progress.”

Chicago’s luck with replay didn’t get any better later.

A safe call on a pickoff attempt by Bryan Morris (1-0) with one out in the top of the 10th was reversed after Pirates manager Clint Hurdle requested a replay, sending Chicago’s Emilio Bonifacio back to the dugout after a delay of 2¢ minutes.

“Most of the time on pickoffs, it’s got to be very noticeable for the umpire,” Morris said. “Those bang-bang plays are always going to go to the runner. I guess that’s why it’s good to have replay.”

The largest regular season crowd in PNC Park’s 14-season history (39,833) roared its approval. The din only grew louder when Walker’s drive to right field finished halfway up the seats. That capped a giddy day for a team freed from two decades of losing after a breakout 2013 in which it won 94 games and made the playoffs for the first time since 1992.

Former Pittsburgh star Barry Bonds presented centerfielder Andrew McCutchen with the NL MVP award that McCutchen earned last year. Bonds received mixed reviews, though the vitriol that accompanied his late career visits to Pittsburgh while playing for San Francisco was noticeably absent.

Bonifacio went 4 for 5 for Chicago, but the Cubs were 0 for 11 with runners in scoring position and wasted a fine start by Samardzija, who scattered five hits over seven innings.

“I was happy with the way I kept the ball down in the strike zone,” Samardzija said. “It helped to get the double plays because they made the overall outing look a little better than it really was.”

Travis Ishikawa had two of the six hits by Pittsburgh.

Starter Francisco Liriano tied a team record shared by three other pitchers for most strikeouts on opening day by fanning 10 in six innings. While he struggled with his command — needing 104 pitches to get 18 outs — he was sharp when he needed to be and Pittsburgh’s bullpen did the rest.

NOTES: Pirates C Chris Stewart took batting practice and says he is coming along ahead of schedule in his rehab from knee surgery. Stewart believes he can beat the timetable of late April for his return. ... Chicago OF Brian Bogusevic was unavailable because of ankle soreness. He is expected to be ready to play Wednesday. ... The teams are off Tuesday.

Cavaliers making late drive for playoff spot

By TOM WITHERS
Associated Press

CLEVELAND — Although faint, the Cavaliers have a playoff pulse. And it’s getting stronger.

Seemingly without hope weeks ago, along with other sub-.500 teams in the Eastern Conference, the Cavaliers still have some life left in them despite key injuries and internal upheaval.

With seven games left and a favorable schedule, Cleveland is in the mix to make the playoffs for the first time since 2010, when LeBron James was in his final year wearing wine and gold.

It’s been a remarkable turnaround for the Cavs (30-45), who hit their low point Feb. 5 with a 119-108 loss to a Los Angeles Lakers team that finished their victory with just five players.

“We just kind of stayed the course,” coach Mike Brown explained Sunday after the Cavs won a physical matchup with Indiana to pull within 2¢ games of Atlanta for the East’s eighth playoff spot. “Our guys just keep fighting.”

The Cavs have won four of five to climb back within reach of the Hawks, who have lost six straight heading into Monday’s game against woeful Philadelphia. Cleveland plays at Orlando on Wednesday before visiting Atlanta on Friday, a game that could determine whether they have anything to play for in the final five games.

They’ll need help from others, but the Cavs can keep the pressure on Atlanta — and the New York Knicks, who are between them and the Hawks — by continuing to win.

“We’re still coming out with that never-say-die mentality and attitude and

Major League Baseball launches expanded replay era

Major League Baseball launched the expanded replay era Monday, and saw instant results — a pair of missed calls by umpires got fixed fast, without any arguments.

Opening day showed off the game's newest nod to modern technology in a sport that long relied on the eyes of its umps.

From now on, most every call can be challenged by a manager. When that happens, the final decision will come from a replay booth in New York, rather than the field. And instead of out or safe, fair or foul, disputes will be settled with two words new to baseball's lingo: confirmed or overturned.

Commissioner Bud Selig was at Miller Park in Milwaukee for the first call that got reversed. Minutes later, another ruling got changed at PNC Park in Pittsburgh.

"You know what? They got the play right. That's the bottom line," said Atlanta manager Fredi Gonzalez, who won his challenge in Milwaukee but lost the game.

Baseball was last among the four major American sports to use video reviews. Even though fans had access to high-tech television screens, MLB stuck with tradition and let umpires make the calls.

In 2008, after a series of missed calls in midseason, baseball went to replay to resolve disputes on potential home runs. A few months ago, extra replay was added.

Baseball hoped the reviews would come quickly, and that they would cut down on the wild, arm-waving arguments between managers and umps that often delighted fans.

Of the first four reviews Monday, none took longer than 2¢ minutes.

"I think that it sure felt like it was out there 10, 15 minutes," Gonzalez said. "Before tonight's over, I'm going to put a clock on it and see exactly how long it took."

"It's a process that they're looking at two to three years of working through the kinks," he said.

The first use of the increased system occurred in Pittsburgh.

Cubs manager Rick Renteria came out to check after Chicago pitcher Jeff Samardzija was called out at first base by umpire Bob Davidson in the fifth inning. Samardzija himself signaled safe as he crossed the bag.

While discussing the play, Renteria got a sign from the dugout to contest the play. Under the new format, teams are allowed to have someone in their clubhouse watch TV replays and then call the bench to say whether it's worth a challenge.

After a 2-minute wait while the umpires hooked up a headset on the field, umpire Larry Vanover — working in the central replay booth in New York — told them the call was correct.

"It was a combination of Samardzija's reaction and what we were looking at," Renteria said. "We're still trying to figure out what clear and compelling evidence is. It's a work in progress."

Later, Cubs runner Emilio Bonifacio was called safe at first base on a pickoff play in the 10th inning. Pirates manager Clint Hurdle challenged the call and was right that Bonifacio was really out. Pittsburgh wound up winning 1-0.

Indians strike deal with Gomes

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) — Catcher Yan Gomes finds no issues in making a long-term commitment to the Cleveland Indians.

He is confident the franchise's strides in a turn-around 2013 season will carry over to future success starting this season.

Gomes and the Indians completed a $23 million, six-year contract Monday after his breakout performance last season.

"It goes into what it means to be in this organization. You've got younger guys like ourselves just wanting to be here," Gomes said. "We're potentially signing a big amount of our careers. There's not another place I would want to be with, especially from the top to the bottom here. It's the organization you want to be with."

That feeling is mutual, even if Gomes provided a small sample size of the impact he can make behind the plate and with the bat. Assistant general manager Mike Chernoff and others in the front office are impressed with Gomes' constant work to better learn Cleveland's pitchers so they all find a comfort zone together.

Gomes' deal includes club options for 2020 and '21 that could bring the total to $42 million over eight years — or even $48 million with escalators.

"This is the organization I want to be with, that actually made it pretty easy," Gomes said before the scheduled opener in rain-soaked Oakland. "I'm so thankful for that. My wife and I are excited to be Cleveland Indians for a while now. ... We got a little taste of the postseason last year. That's what we play for."

Gomes hit .294 with 11 homers and 38 RBIs in 88 games last season, his first with the Indians. The Indians went 49-30 when Gomes started, and manager Terry Francona went with Gomes during crucial games down the September stretch.

"It's kind of been the motto of my career — I've always had to battle. It's not going to stop," Gomes said. "This is a huge blessing getting a contract like this, but now we're talking about taking this team to another level."

His new deal supersedes a previous one-year contract for 2014. The deal replaces a contract he agreed to in early March calling for a $513,000 salary in the majors and $281,000 in the minors.

Gomes receives a $500,000 signing bonus, payable within 30 days of the contract's approval, and salaries of $550,000 salary this year, $1 million in 2015, $2.5 million in 2016, $4.5 million in 2017, $5.95 million in 2018 and $7 million in 2019. Cleveland has a $9 million option for 2020 with a $1 million buyout, and if that is exercised the Indians would have an $11 million option for 2021.

The options may escalate by up to $3 million each based on MVP voting, Gold Glove and Silver Slugger awards, and All-Star appearances.

"He's shown us that he's worth this contract," Francona said. "We have that much faith in him, and that's pretty amazing for a young kid with that kind of track record, or lack of track record, for us to buy in that much. So that's a pretty good compliment to him."

Negotiations began during spring training. The deal with Gomes will keep Cleveland's young core together for years to come.

"You hope that these deals are win-win deals," Chernoff said. "They all want to be here. It's an environment, a culture, that people want to be a part of."

The 26-year-old — the first Brazilian-born player in the majors — began last season at Triple-A Columbus, but after being brought up in April he stayed the rest of the year and was a major contributor as the Indians made the playoffs for the first time since 2007.

Gomes was acquired from Toronto on Nov. 2, 2012.

"He is the guy that, in spring training as we're having these talks with him about a long-term contract, he's putting in more and more time to try to get to know the pitchers to build on where he was last year," Chernoff said. "He's also a great organizational story. Our scouts worked really hard to identify Yan with Toronto and find a way to get him in a deal."

Gomes was set to start and bat ninth in the season opener.

SPOT FROM 1B

we're just fighting as long as there's season left," said guard Jarrett Jack, who has been instrumental in Cleveland's recent rise. "We're going to keep clawing at it. I think what was best for us, I know me personally, I stopped looking at the standings and just started focusing on what was in this locker room."

"Once we did that, it seemed like the brand of basketball we were playing became more consistent and we gave ourselves an opportunity to be in the situation we're in now."

On Monday, the Cavs learned that All-Star point guard Kyrie Irving may be back on the floor for their final playoff push. Irving was cleared to resume full-contact practice after missing eight games with a strained left biceps tendon. The team did not say if he'll play against the Magic, but the Cavs were bracing for the possibility Irving's season could be over if he had not improved.

Irving's return, though, was tempered by the results of an MRI on forward Anderson Varejao's shoulder. Varejao, the club's leading rebounder, sustained a sprained shoulder joint on Sunday. He will miss Wednesday's game and probably a few more.

It's the latest medical setback for Varejao, who missed 15 games earlier this season with a sore back and has been limited to just 81 games over the previous three seasons by a variety of injuries.

That's how it's been for Cleveland all season — ups and downs, good and bad.

One game they outmuscle the powerful Pacers; the next they fall flat on their faces.

But recently, they've come together with Jack and second-year guard Dion Waiters leading the way in the absence of Irving, the club's best player and one of the league's rising stars.

"We're getting used to each other, that's been the key," said forward Luol Deng, acquired in an early January trade from Chicago. "We're starting to use our strengths, using what each player can do. Our defense has been great. It's just us maturing as a team. We just need to win. Nothing else matters. It's not going to be perfect and we're starting to play for the win, not think about anything else."

The Cavs have gone 14-12 since Feb. 6, when general manager Chris Grant was fired by owner Dan Gilbert, who at the time said "I take responsibility for where we're at."

Brown has managed to keep his young team working toward a goal despite the absence of Irving and Varejao, who missed 15 games with a sore back, for extended periods.

The addition of center Spencer Hawes has opened the floor and given Cleveland's offense more options, but Deng said the bottom line for the Cavs has been stringing wins together.

"Winning really makes you believe in each other," he said. "Guys are starting to realize that they can do it. There's no magic to it. It's really playing together and believing in each other, and I really think once we won a few in a row, we started to play better."

During Sunday's win, the Cavs matched the Pacers push for push, shove for shove.

At one point in the fourth quarter, Hawes came to the rescue of scrappy rookie guard Matthew Dellavedova, who was floored by an elbow from Indiana forward David West. Hawes stood up for the pesky and popular "Delly," a feisty Australian who perhaps best embodies the Cavs' grit.

Hawes will likely draw a fine by the league, but he got a reward from Dellavedova.

Mixed reaction for Bonds in Pittsburgh homecoming

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Barry Bonds spent a portion of Monday morning driving around Pittsburgh, marveling at the changes he's seen in the city since baseball's career home run king bolted for San Francisco more than two decades ago.

He drove by his old apartment in the western suburbs and the reconfigured North Shore, where Three Rivers Stadium has been replaced by sparkling PNC Park. The makeover hasn't been limited to the scenery. After 21 years, it appears the old wounds surrounding Bonds' abrupt departure have started to heal, too.

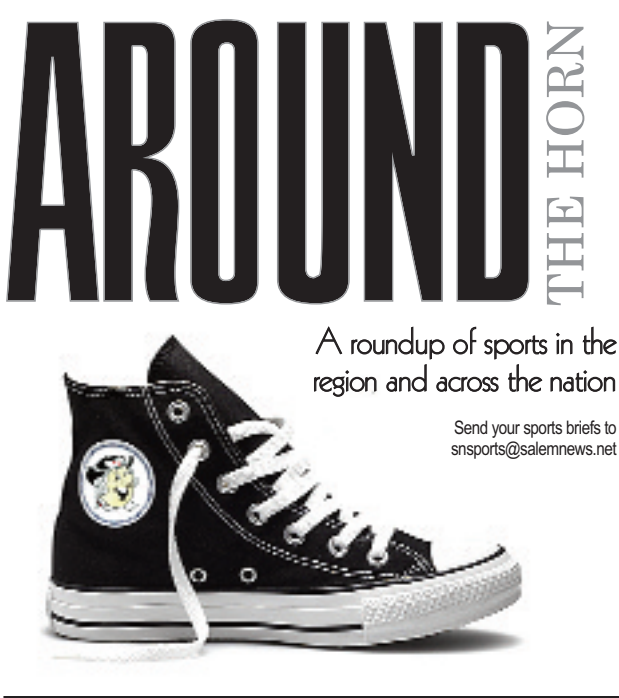

Bonds drew a mixture of boos and cheers while presenting current Pittsburgh center fielder Andrew McCutchen with the 2013 NL MVP award. Bonds was the previous Pirates player to win the honor, earning the second of his record seven career MVP trophies in 1992.

Standing next to McCutchen, Bonds waved to the packed house and seemed at ease in his first public appearance in conjunction with the team where he starred from 1986-92 before leaving for San Francisco via free agency.

"It feels good to be back where it all started," Bonds said. "We had some great times here."

Bonds then sat in the stands and watched as the Pirates opened against the Chicago Cubs.

Bonds won the 1990 and 1992 MVP awards while playing for the Pirates from 1986-92 and led the team to three straight NL East titles.

BOWLING GREEN — The Bowling Green women's basketball lost 55-50 to Rutgers in the fourth round of the Women's National Invitation Tournament. Canfield graduate Jillian Halfill played the final game of her college career, scoring 10 points for the Falcons, who finish the season at 30-5.

Kahleah Copper led Rutgers (26-9) with 14 points. Rutgers will travel to South Florida for a semifinal matchup at 7 p.m. Wednesday.

Alejars suspended for two weeks

WARREN — Girard High School baseball coach Aaron Alejars has been suspended for two weeks because of inappropriate language at practice, according to the Girard superintendent David Cappuzzello.

Indians' athletics director Joe Cappuzzello, David's uncle, said he was "sent information" regarding the former Salem baseball coach's language and investigated the issue. David Cappuzzello was informed of the situation and said he then met with coach Alejars.

"We talked to the coach and he said, 'Yeah. I wiggled out that day. I had a bad day,' " David Cappuzzello said. "I said, 'OK. Well, every action has a consequence. I just want to let you know: We don't stand for it. We don't put up with it and I'm letting you know, don't let it happen again.' "

David, Joe and Nick Cochran, who will take over as athletics director when Joe retires on June 30, then held a meeting and decided to suspend Alejars from all practices and games, David said. The suspension began on Wednesday, March 26 and will end Wednesday, April 7, according to David Cappuzzello.

"We handled it properly," Joe Cappuzzello said. "The coach was wrong, and he apologized. He got mad at the kids about some things, and he used inappropriate language."

Redskins sign offensive lineman Mike McGlynn

ASHBURN, Va. (AP) — The Washington Redskins have signed free agent offensive lineman Mike McGlynn.

The team announced the move Friday.

McGlynn can play center and both guard positions. He's started 48 games over five NFL seasons with the Philadelphia Eagles, Cincinnati Bengals and Indianapolis Colts.

McGlynn is expected to add depth to a line that allowed 43 sacks last year, and possibly contend for a starting job. The Redskins recently signed free agent Shawn Lauvao to play left guard and released center Will Montgomery. They plan to move Kory Lichtensteiger from left guard to center, while keeping Chris Chester at right guard.

Heat move atop East, beat Raptors 93-83

MIAMI (AP) — LeBron James scored 32 points, Chris Bosh added 18 and the Miami Heat moved into the top spot in the Eastern Conference with a 93-83 win over the Toronto Raptors on Monday night.

Chris Andersen scored 13 points on 5-for-5 shooting and Mario Chalmers added 12 for Miami, which was again without Dwyane Wade, Greg Oden and Ray Allen.

Miami (51-22, .699) moved percentage points ahead of Indiana (52-23, .693), which lost at home earlier Monday night to San Antonio, 103-77. It's the first time all season that Miami has been alone atop the East.

The Heat were down 10 midway through the second quarter, and then closed the half on a 22-9 run to take the lead and never trailed again.

Greivis Vasquez scored 17 points, DeMar DeRozan scored 16 and Jonas Valanciunas finished with 14 points and 10 rebounds for the Raptors. Steve Novak added 13 for Toronto, which lost Kyle Lowry to a sore left knee late in the third quarter after he collided with James.

Miami has now won 15 straight against the Raptors, the last 14 of those meetings coming since Bosh left Toronto and joined the Heat during the summer of 2010. It's the second-longest current winning streak the Heat have over an opponent; they've beaten Charlotte 16 straight times.

New inquiry into Hillsborough soccer disaster

LONDON (AP) — As Liverpool closes in on its first English league title in 24 years, fans are returning to the club's darkest day.

After years of campaigning to expose wrongdoing by the authorities, new inquiries into Britain's worst sports disaster are beginning this week, with the families of the 96 Liverpool fans crushed to death at Hillsborough in 1989 seeking verdicts of unlawful killing.

The original accidental death verdicts were overturned by the High Court in London in 2012 after fresh documents uncovered a cover-up by police.

The deaths came during Liverpool's FA Cup semifinal against Nottingham Forest. A standing-only section of the stadium for visiting fans became overcrowded, and authorities sought to place the blame on the victims by characterizing the disaster as a result of hooliganism.

Liverpool fan groups maintain that police were to blame for herding the fans into that section to avoid overcrowding outside the stadium.

The new hearings could take about a year, with jury selection beginning Monday in Warrington near Liverpool. Over the next month, families will be able to tell the jury about their relatives who died.

Taurus Moon and the Fools

The Taurus moon has a twist for this April Fool's Day. Rather than fooling people with pranks, the Taurus moon is primarily interested in the opportunities born of the foolishness of others. For instance, people will sell costly items for dirt-cheap when they need money fast, and there are those who don't know good love when it's theirs.

ARIES (March 21-April 19). Because your commitment to the success of a group is so strong, you feel responsible for what happens in this regard whether or not you are the direct cause of it. When the group wins, you win.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20). You'll suspend what you think you know in order to experience what is really taking place. You'll likely find out that at least some of what you thought you knew was wrong.

GEMINI (May 21-June 21). You'll use your social savvy and political intuition to figure out whom you need to influence to help your project along. Hint: The person who is doing all of the talking is not the most powerful person at the table.

CANCER (June 22-July 22). You're ready to solve a troubling relationship issue. Where does your mind go when you engage with this person? The answer to that question will unlock the puzzle behind this problem.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22). Serious topics are sometimes best handled with levity. You'll strike the right balance and help someone through what has the potential to be a very awkward situation.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22). You are a visual person, but it takes more than a pretty face to hold your interest. You'll be attracted to the person who engages your mind the best. Where your thoughts lead, your heart will follow.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23). You need to feel needed. Of course, it's better to discover a need than create one. You'll carefully observe your surroundings, inwardly asking yourself what necessary thing is lacking here.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 21). There are definite benefits to getting involved with you these days, and that's what you need to keep your eye on. When you feel good about the package deal that is "you," everything else falls right into place.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21). If you're wasting time searching for keys, papers, etc., something's wrong. Organization and success are so closely linked now that even if you have to spend the whole day getting organized, it still will be a power move.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19). It's a day of fast fixes, succinct answers and brief interactions. What happens quickly and efficiently is still meaningful and actually may stick in the memory better than long drawn-out processes.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18). If you can achieve a Zen-like "beginner's mind" even though you've been down this road before and know what's likely to occur around each bend, you'll be richly rewarded (and surprised) by what happens today.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20). You have a stellar memory these days, but writing things down is still important. A pen and paper will engage your sense of touch and help you bring a higher degree of focus to the significant details of your life.

TODAY'S BIRTHDAY (April 1). It's your year to stop sacrificing so much and make your own needs a higher priority, even if those needs happen to be for frivolous things like glamour, fun and thrills. You'll break your own record in May. A new friend introduces you to a different culture in June. July brings equal parts duty and novelty. Capricorn and Pisces people adore you. Your lucky numbers are: 10, 5, 30, 14 and 22.

ASTROLOGICAL QUESTIONS: "I work in sales. A representative from a competing company approached me last week and said they've been hearing about my work, and they want me to come work for them with a salary increase of 25 percent. I never signed a non-compete clause with my current company, so I'm free to go. But something feels funny about this, like it's too good to be true. What do my stars say? I'm an Aries with Mercury in Aries, too."

Your birthday is also called a solar return, as it is the time of year when the sun returns to the part of the sky it was in at your birth. It's an opportunity-filled time, and you are typically filled with confidence and the spirit of adventure at this time of year. The important things to consider about the job offer are the factors that are not financial. Can you see yourself being happy with the company and the people? What are the hours like? Can you get behind the product? Think about the long-term effects of this decision. Will you be burning bridges by making the leap? Your gut is telling you something, and it would be foolish to ignore that.

Tiny battery danger

Heloise

Dear Heloise: Please warn your readers of the dangers of BUTTON BATTERIES and children swallowing them. My son was able to get one out of a musical greeting card, but luckily I was there and stopped him before he could put it in his mouth. It seems more items have these tiny batteries, and we all need to be aware of the danger. -- Julie T. in Indiana

Thank goodness your son is OK! And thank you for writing to warn parents and grandparents. These very small batteries can be in children's books, some toys with remote controls and even greeting cards! Sadly, more children are ending up needing medical attention because they swallow these batteries, or even stick them in their nose or ears, as young children are prone to do! So try to keep these batteries out of their reach.

If you think your child has swallowed a battery, DON'T let him or her eat or drink, and don't try to get your child to vomit. Seek medical attention immediately -- call 911! Please don't waste valuable time thinking it's not a big deal. It is, and don't drive your child to the hospital yourself -- call 911. It's better to go to the emergency room and have it NOT be a life-threatening situation. -- Heloise

KEEP DRY

Dear Heloise: When I go to an outdoor event or on vacation and plan to use my camera, I always pack a shower cap in my pocket or purse. Many times I have protected my camera by covering it with the shower cap when an unexpected rain shower went through or there was a splash from ocean waves. -- Maria D. in Florida

AUTO LOCKS

Dear Heloise: When I was buying a new car, I was alarmed that all the doors unlocked when the car was put in park. This is a safety issue to me, because I don't want my doors and hatchback to unlock automatically when I park at a gas station or an ATM. The dealership was able to change this so that the doors stayed locked.

Reading the owners manual, I found that I could change the setting by following the directions. -- Janet S., via email

Very good safety point, especially if you are a woman alone at night! -- Heloise

DRYER SHEETS

Dear Heloise: Used dryer sheets come in handy to clean lint from the filter in the dryer and to wipe up lint that falls from the stacked washer/dryer.

I also use them to give the rooms a quick dust. -- A Reader, via email

I, too, stash a few out of sight in each room for an impromptu dusting, especially when I seem to stumble on more dust than I'd thought was there! -- Heloise

Reader foolishness helps mark the day

DEAR READERS: It's April Fools' Day, the one day I can share some of the more unique letters that come my way -- clearly, more than a few of which were written in an attempt to have some fun with me. Enjoy!

DEAR ABBY: Many times when I would wake up in the morning, I'd find toothpaste already on my toothbrush, courtesy of my foreign-born girlfriend, "Inger." Because I am chivalrous, I figured I would return the favor. So at night before going to bed or in the morning, I'd tiptoe to the bathroom and put toothpaste on her toothbrush.

Well, the other day Inger told me, "DON'T put toothpaste on my toothbrush!" I was flabbergasted. And if that's not enough, she no longer preps my toothbrush, either.

I know, I know -- I should have asked a simple "Why?" but I wasn't in the mood for drama. Now it's eating at me and I just don't get it. -- CONFUSED IN CONNECTICUT

DEAR CONFUSED: I'm sorry to be the bearer of bad news, but here it is: Inger appears to be giving you the brush-off.

DEAR ABBY: I have this really hot, sexy latex dress in lilac. I can't decide which color 6-inch stilettos to wear with it, black or white. I don't want to look trashy. -- FASHIONISTA IN THE EAST

DEAR FASHIONISTA: With latex in April, wear flats and a LONG overcoat.

DEAR ABBY: I married a wonderful man last week. It was the wedding of my dreams except for one thing: My husband's sister brought six birds with her and insisted it was perfectly acceptable to keep them in the reception area. My new in-laws all said I was "unreasonable" for not allowing the caged birds in the reception area.

I was strong and stood my ground. After a year of preparation, I didn't want our nuptials spoiled by uninvited birds. Has anyone ever written to you about uninvited birds being brought to a wedding? -- RUFFLED FEATHERS IN RENO

DEAR RUFFLED: The only ones I can recall were a few cuckoos, but I'm not sure they were of the avian variety.

DEAR ABBY: I have a dear old friend I talk with on the phone several times a day. She is the talkative type and sometimes keeps me on the phone for half an hour at a time. The problem is I have an overactive bladder and sometimes must rush to the bathroom. It's very embarrassing. Is there a nice way to tell her I need to get off the phone for a few minutes without being rude or too specific? -- LEAKING IN LAS VEGAS

DEAR LEAKING: Yes. Tell her to hang on, you'll be back in a flush.

DEAR ABBY: All the letters you have printed about pennies brought back the memories of what happened in our family when I was very small. My mother won a $10 gold piece for her sponge cake, but our family dog swallowed the coin.

You are probably wondering if we got the coin back. No, we didn't. Turned out the coin was counterfeit, and the dog couldn't "pass it." -- GOTCHA! IN AMHERST, OHIO

DEAR GOTCHA!: Now that's a shaggy dog story if I ever heard one. (And for a moment, I swallowed it.)

Anxiety may cause strange spells

Dr. Keith Roach

DEAR DR.

ROACH: I have been having weird spells for about six months. They occur only occasionally and last a couple of days and nights. They awaken me out of sleep and are a little frightening. It starts with a burning sensation on the right side of my nose. I feel as if I have to remember something, and a wave of warmth floods over my upper torso, down to my arms. I feel my heart fluttering, and am a little sick to my stomach. I also have funny sensations in my right ear. It lasts a few seconds, and I just have to ride it out. When it's over, I feel weak for a while.

I saw a neurologist, who mentioned that it might be anxiety, which made me mad -- being awakened out of a sound sleep doesn't seem to me that I am anxious, as I have no trouble sleeping! He wanted to put me on a medication with a lot of side effects, such as dizziness and hallucinations. I do not want to be on medication, but I also don't want to have a grand mal seizure. He could not tell me if I could have one or not. I only want affirmation that I am not crazy! -- L.G.

ANSWER: You aren't crazy. Your neurologist may be right -- this can be related to anxiety -- but I wouldn't jump to that diagnosis without considering a few things first.

A warm sensation over different parts of your body should make your doctor think of conditions like carcinoid syndrome and pheochromocytoma. These are tumors that secrete hormone-like substances that can cause odd feelings, such as flushing or warmth, in different parts of the body. They can be screened for with simple urine and blood tests. I agree with you that being awakened with this sensation makes anxiety or panic attack less likely. It does not sound like a seizure disorder to me.

Sometimes, people notice sensations that defy medical explanation. In that case, we generally just try to make sure it isn't something that doesn't threaten life or health and help people minimize and live with the symptoms.

DEAR DR. ROACH: I have a problem that I am embarrassed to discuss with my doctor. When I am going to the bathroom and straining with a bowel movement, often recently I will have a major cramp in my abdomen. It used to always occur slightly below my belly button, but now it has moved lower and sometimes to my left side. The cramp is very severe and can be felt and seen on my body surface. Is this something I can do anything about? -- L.S.

ANSWER: Don't be embarrassed. Your doctor needs to know, and needs to do an exam to feel what might be going on. It could be your normal physiology; it could be mild irritable bowel syndrome. It might be a hernia, especially if it can be seen on your body. Doctors aren't easily embarrassed, and have heard complaints much, much worse than that.

Nurse cringes at dental procedures

Annie's Mailbox

Dear Annie: As a registered nurse and a patient who has had many dental procedures, I cringe every time I get into a dentist's chair. The reason is the overhead light -- the one that the hygienist or dentist can adjust and lower. The hygienists and dentists wear gloves, but the gloves protect them, not the patient. They put their gloved hands in patients' mouths and then reach up and adjust the light as needed, time after time. Their gloved hands transfer bacteria from a patient's saliva (and sometimes blood) to the light fixture. Then the next patient gets in the chair, and the procedure is repeated.

I don't see how they can avoid transferring harmful bacteria and viruses from one patient to another unless they clean the light fixture off between every patient. I hope I'm wrong, but I have never seen or heard of this being done.

I learned sterile procedure in nursing school. If they teach sterile procedure to hygienists and dentists, they don't seem to be using it in my dentist's office. -- Nervous Patient

Dear Nervous: Relax. The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, working with the American Dental Association, has developed recommendations that say all surfaces, including the dental chair, dental light, instrument tray, drawer handles and countertops, should be cleaned and decontaminated. Some offices may cover this equipment with protective covers, which are replaced after each patient. Non-disposable items like dental instruments are cleaned and sterilized between patients, while disposable dental instruments and needles are tossed along with disposable wear, such as gloves.

It's quite likely that your dentist is doing all of these things before you enter the room, and therefore, you don't see it. If you have questions about infection control, talk to your dentist or check ADA.org.

Dear Annie: A year ago, my husband's grown daughter announced that she would be getting married this summer. Despite heated conversations, she decided to marry in her current city, saying that having her friends in attendance is more important than having her family there.

Her father has always tried to stay involved in her life (to the extent her mother would allow). So you can imagine his shock when he was told that she decided to have her stepfather walk her down the aisle for her big day. This has caused a huge rift in the family, and my husband feels the only way to save face is not to attend. Eager to avoid the expense of traveling and as a show of support, his extended family also decided not to attend.

I fear that this may cause a permanent end
