Salem council returns tap-in power to Weingart

By LARRY SHIELDS
Staff Writer

SALEM — Council passed two emergency measures, one to streamline the utility tap-in procedure and the other to partner with East Liverpool and Columbiana County in implementing the housing impact and preservation program for 2014.

Both were passed unanimously Tuesday and Mayor John Berlin said the adjustment to the utilities ordinance, which delegates in-city tap-in authority back to Superintendent Don Weingart, will shorten the process considerably.

Weingart said it modifies a 2009 ordinance and will allow for new tap-ins to take place, but council retains the authority regarding service outside the city.

The housing impact resolution gives the mayor the authority to partner with East Liverpool in obtaining CHIP funds.

The program provides grants to eligible communities for housing-related activities, including necessary infrastructure improvements.

Grants are awarded competitively and encourage a flexible, community-wide approach to improving and providing affordable housing for low- and moderate-income people while strengthening neighborhoods through community collaboration.

In other business, resident Michael Traina, PhD., questioned why one year of study and the involvement of so many city departments is necessary for an indoor shooting range “because one person wants it.”

Crash ties up Route 45

Mary R. LaMarra, 69, of Salineville was transported by KLG ambulance to Salem Regional Medical Center with non-life threatening injuries after a single-car crash Tuesday afternoon on state Route 45 just south of McCracken Corners near Salem. Traffic was halted in both directions for a little more than an hour. Leetonia firefighters/EMS had to extricate LaMarra from her Chevy Equinox. The extrication was affected by the fact that none of the airbags in LaMarra's vehicle had deployed, making it a more detailed cutting operation to get her out safely. According to the highway patrol, the vehicle was southbound on Route 45 and crossed over the northbound lane, coming to a stop in the ditch. LaMarra was wearing her safety belt. Trooper Race Baker is investigating the accident. (Salem News photo by Patti Schaeffer)

Columbiana eyes enterprise zone

By KATIE SCHWENDEMAN
Staff Writer

COLUMBIANA — The city is looking into creating an enterprise zone to offer incentives such as property tax abatements to non-retail businesses interested in locating here, or existing businesses looking to expand.

City Manager Lance Willard said he met with Columbiana County Port Authority CEO Tracy Drake and county Development Director Tad Herold after the last council meeting to discuss economic development.

“This really would be a helpful tool when prospective businesses call and ask us what incentives we have to attract them,” Willard said.

He has also already spoken with Duane Reichard of Reichard Industries about how a zone would affect his company, which is looking to add a new facility to its South Main Street location. The company also has a facility in Niles.

“We would like to build in Columbiana. From a cost standpoint currently it is actually cheaper to build at our Niles facility, because the ground is already ready, you don't have to move sewers. Another option is to go down south,” Reichard said.

The company wants to add to its Columbiana location mainly because the city has been “great to work with,” he explained.

The creation of an enterprise zone would help the company expand, he added.

Reichard employs 62 people between both locations and is looking to add 20 more after the expansion, which includes the construction of an 18,000-square-foot facility near the existing one in Columbiana.

The industrial equipment company offers many imported and domestic products like blast furnaces, bottle cars, ductwork, electric furnaces, fan housings and gear boxes, to name a few.

Reichard said the company has experienced 300 percent growth since 2004. He and his brother Keith took over after their father's retirement in 2003. It has been a family-run business since the 1980s.

“We are in a position where we have no choice but to grow. Our biggest competition right now is China, and not because their prices are better, but their facilities are better,” he said.

Parents push for seat belt rule after daughter's death

By DEANNE JOHNSON
Staff Writer

LISBON — While law enforcement officials and politicians kicked off the annual Click It or Ticket campaign locally in Lisbon early on Tuesday, the parents of one Minerva child killed after she was thrown from a vehicle was scheduled to testify later in the day in Columbus about new seat belt legislation.

Addisyn Benzel, 11, was thrown from a vehicle she was riding in with family friends in January, after the vehicle was struck head-on by a vehicle which reportedly went left of center. Benzel, the driver, James Nign, and his wife, Meghann Nign, were all killed in the crash.

Benzel's parents were scheduled to testify in front of the Senate Transportation Committee Tuesday afternoon. They are among those supporting Senate Bill 302 introduced by state Sen. Joe Schiavoni. If it passes, the legislation would allow law enforcement to pull over a vehicle based on seeing unrestrained children riding inside.

Schiavoni noted currently the law considers seat belt use by children 15 and under to be a secondary offense. Law enforcement can only cite someone after pulling them over for

Lisbon, car lot OK deal

By TOM GIAMBRONI
Staff Writer

LISBON — The Elkton Auto Corral is moving back to town after reaching a compromise with Village Council at Tuesday's meeting.

The resolution adopted by council requires the village to run a sanitary sewer line at its expense to the rear of the used car dealership's building. Owners Jay and Susan Mullen are responsible for installing a lateral line connecting the dealership building to the sewer line.

“Thank you very, very much,” Susan Mullen told council, which met in executive session for an hour to work out the details. Mullen and her husband Jay own the dealership, and she said they intend to move their vehicles back to Lisbon.

“We're sorry it took so long,” Councilman Steve DeFilippo told them.

The saga began when the Mullens purchased the former Quinn Chevrolet dealership at auction in 2012 and relocated their used car business there from Elkton. They did not discover until 2013 that sewer service to the building had been cut off by the village about two months prior to the sale after a strong odor of fuel was smelled by a contractor installing a storm sewer in North Jefferson Street, which runs parallel to the dealership.

After discovering the problem, the Mullens approached the village, only to be told the property owner is responsible for connecting to the sewer line, regardless of the circumstances.

Complicating the situation was residual groundwater contamination from an old

Lisbon sticking with blue, white for band uniforms

By TOM GIAMBRONI
Staff Writer

LISBON — The high school band is sticking with blue and white as the primary colors for its new uniforms.

Junior/High School Principal Joe Siefke reported after last week's school board meeting that the band booster club recently chose new band uniforms that will retain the school's traditional primary colors of blue and white.

In December, Siefke reported the booster club was considering new uniforms with black as the primary color, sparking debate among administrators and the board. At the time, Siefke emphasized the school teams are the Blue Devils, and Superintendent Don Thompson warned that it would be a complete break with tradition to get away from blue and white as the school's primary colors.

In the end, the boosters chose a uniform that keeps with tradition, although black will be used as an accent, Siefke said. Black is already used as an accent in the football team's uniforms.

During the board meeting, Thompson reported they continue to share bus services with the Columbiana County Education Service Center, which is being expanded to include the Beaver Local school district and the county Board of Developmental Disabilities.

Lisbon joined with the ESC several years ago as way to save money by sharing supervision and costs in regard to operation of its bus system, and dispatching services are being added to the list. Thompson said the inclusion of two more members will not result in any cost increase for Lisbon.

The board also:

- Will be looking for a new athletic director following the resignation of Don Feren, who is completing his fourth year on the job. The board also accepted the resignation of second-grade teacher Patricia Stewart, who retired last year but was rehired.
- Renewed its contract with Nutrition Inc. to continue operate the district's cafeteria system for $9,800, which is a 1.4 percent increase over last year, according to Treasurer Cindy Shultz.
- Hired the following people as summer custodians at $8.50 an hour: Patty Boyd, Valerie Hochmann, C.J. Dawson, Brandon Hull and Tammy Morris.
- Renewed the following teaching contracts: Amanda Adkins, elementary; Kyle Bing, high school English; Kelly House, elementary; Lauri Sauerwein, physical education/health; James Watt, science/online administrator; Amy Cappuzzello, math/technology; Adam Fill, technology; and Melody Allison, guidance.
- Renewed the contracts of Kella Haren, nurse; and Colleen vanLeeuwen, library/media.
- Renewed the contracts of: Patricia Boyd, Elaine DeSellem and Lou Thompson, instructional aides; Dawn Dunn, pre-school aide; and Katherine Callahan, nurse's aide.
- Renewed the contracts of: Rita Heim, bus driver; John Less and Jayne Hawkins, custodians; Michelle Hall and Audrey Willard, food service; and Christine Freeland, secretary.
- Hired Farnham Equipment Co. to replace gymnasium bleachers for $24,994 and Buckeye Sports Floors to resurface the gymnasium floor for $3,420.
- Accepted a $3,500 donation from the Ohio State Eagles Charity Fund through the Lisbon Touchdown Club. The money will go into the athletic department account.

McConnell routs tea party rival in Ky. GOP primary; Nunn wins Georgia Dem Senate nomination

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senate Republican leader Mitch McConnell dispatched his tea party challenger with ease Tuesday night, and Democrats turned to two women, Alison Lundergan Grimes to oppose him in Kentucky and Michelle Nunn to fight for Georgia, in elections next fall with control of the Senate at stake.

Setting up a third high-profile race, Democratic Sen. Mark Pryor of Arkansas and his Republican challenger, Rep. Tom Cotton, were unopposed for their parties' nominations.

On the busiest primary night of the year to date, Democrats eyeing a return to power in the Pennsylvania state Capitol nominated businessman Tom Wolf to oppose Republican Gov. Tom Corbett's bid for a second term.

Republican primary struggles between establishment-backed conservatives and tea party-favored rivals were a dominant feature of the evening, as they had been earlier in North Carolina and will be later in Mississippi, Kansas and Alaska. Republicans must gain six seats to win a Senate majority, and party leaders have made it a priority to avoid the presence of candidates on the ballot this fall who are seen as too conservative or unsteady — or both — to prevail in winnable races.

McConnell, a five-term lawmaker and the embodiment of the GOP establishment, was pulling 60 percent of the vote in Kentucky. Challenger Matt Bevin was gaining 36 percent.

Thai army declares martial law, denies coup underway as it intervenes in crisis

BANGKOK (AP) — Thailand's powerful army chief intervened for the first time in the country's latest political crisis, declaring martial law and dispatching gun-mounted jeeps into the heart of the capital with a vow to resolve the deepening conflict as quickly as possible.

The army insisted it was not taking over, and it left the nation's severely weakened caretaker government intact. But a dozen official edicts announced throughout the day — which steadily expanded the military's power and included media censorship and threats to prosecute opponents — fueled speculation troops had carried out what Human Rights Watch described as "a de facto coup."

Despite Tuesday's dramatic events, life continued normally in most of the country, with residents largely unfazed by the declaration and tourist sites open. But the intervention, which follows six months of crippling protests that killed 28 people and injured more than 800, left the country at another precarious crossroads — its fate now squarely in the hands of the military.

"The key going forward will be the military's role in politics," said Thitinan Pongsudhirak, director of the Institute of Security and International Studies at Bangkok's Chulalongkorn University. "If they play the role of enforcer of law and order and even mediator ... this could be a resolution to the impasse."

But if they don't, "we can expect protests and turmoil from the losing side."

Police: 'Shield' actor Jace called 911 and told operator that he shot his wife

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Actor Michael Jace, who played a police officer on the hit TV show "The Shield," was arrested Tuesday after authorities said he called 911 and told an operator he shot his wife.

Detectives were investigating whether the couple's financial problems or other marital difficulties played a role in the killing that police said occurred during an argument Monday night while the couple's two sons, both under 10, were in the house.

Police were unsure if the children witnessed the argument or gunfire. They were placed with relatives.

April Jace, 40, was shot multiple times and was found dead in a hallway of the family home in the quiet, modest Hyde Park neighborhood of Los Angeles. Police recovered a handgun believed to belong to her husband, Los Angeles police Detective Dean Vinluan said.

118 dead in twin car bombs at bus station, market in Nigerian city

JOS, Nigeria (AP) — Two car bombs exploded at a bustling bus terminal and market in Nigeria's central city of Jos on Tuesday, killing at least 118 people, wounding dozens and leaving bloodied bodies amid the flaming debris.

There was no immediate claim of responsibility for the twin car bombs. But they bore the hallmarks of Boko Haram, the Islamic extremist group that abducted nearly 300 schoolgirls last month and has repeatedly targeted bus stations and other locations where large numbers of people gather in its campaign to impose Islamic law on Nigeria.

The second blast came half an hour after the first, killing some of the rescue workers who had rushed to the scene, which was obscured by billows of black smoke.

"It's horrifying, terrible," said Mark Lipdo of the Stefanos Foundation, a Christian charity based in Jos, who described the sickening smell of burning human flesh.

Federal court halts Missouri inmate's execution, citing medical condition

BONNE TERRE, Mo. (AP) — The Missouri Attorney General's office on Tuesday evening appealed a federal appeals court panel's ruling that temporarily halted the execution of a condemned killer, a ruling that cited concerns about the inmate's rare medical condition that could cause pain and suffering during lethal injection.

The appeal came soon after a three-judge panel of the 8th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, in a 2-1 ruling, halted the execution of Russell Bucklew. He is scheduled to die at 12:01 a.m. Wednesday for killing a southeast Missouri man in 1996. "Bucklew's un rebutted medical evidence demonstrates the requisite sufficient likelihood of unnecessary pain and suffering beyond the constitutionally permissible amount inherent in all executions," the ruling read.

In a dissenting opinion, appeals court Judge James Loken said Bucklew's medical evidence "simply does not satisfy the Supreme Court's rigorous standards" for a stay of execution.

The office of Attorney General Chris Koster asked for a hearing before the full 8th Circuit, saying the panel's ruling conflicted with previous Supreme Court rulings.

Millions of bees swarm, close Del. highway ramp

NEWARK, Del. (AP) — As many as 20 million swarming bees released after a tractor-trailer hauling them overturned near Newark Tuesday have shut down a highway ramp and kept investigators from getting near the vehicle, said Delaware State Police, who urged drivers to stay away from the area. The tractor-trailer fell on its side about 6:10 p.m. on a curve on a ramp from Route 896 to Interstate 95, said state police spokesman Sgt. Paul Shavack.

The rig, traveling from Florida to Maine, carried 460 crated hives, or an estimated 16 million to 20 million honeybees.

The driver and two passengers were able to get out of the vehicle, but were stuck 50 to 100 times each, troopers said. They also suffered minor injuries in the crash and were taken to Christiana Hospital. Shavack said there were reports of passers-by being stung.

State police have had an official honeybee swarm removal plan for 14 years and this is the first time they used it, Shavack said.

Shavack says three on-call bee handlers were sent to the scene and they are working with firefighters to spray water on the insects, the crates and the truck.

"There's no rounding them up," Shavack said of the bees. "The water will disperse and calm the bee activity." He said he hopes once the bee situation is mitigated, troopers will be able to right the truck, move it and reopen the ramp.

Ohio State presidential search tops $600,000

COLUMBUS (AP) — Ohio State University spent more than $600,000 on the search for its new president, including $186,000 for private jet service and about $230,000 for an executive headhunting firm, according to records released Tuesday.

Other expenses included $85,000 for an ad in The New York Times, part of $117,988 the university spent for a one-day symposium in August titled, "Who will lead America's public universities in the 21st century?"

The documents released at the request of The Associated Press and other media outlets also show $36,000 in consulting fees paid to retired Harvard professor Richard Chait, who moderated the symposium; $3,038 for lunch for the search committee catered by Columbus restaurateur Cameron Mitchell; and $1,496 for a steakhouse dinner for members of a search subcommittee.

Private donations covered the cost of the Ohio State search and no tuition or tax dollars were used, said university spokesman Gary Lewis.

The seven-month search ended in January with the selection of University of California-Irvine chancellor Michael Drake as the 15th president of Ohio State.

Although Drake's selection wasn't announced until Jan. 30, the committee had apparently made up its mind almost three weeks earlier, buying Drake and his wife, Brenda Drake, a $223 "welcome gift" on Jan. 10, according to the documents.

Drake, 63, who assumes his duties July 1, replaces former president Gordon Gee, who retired after remarks he made jabbing Roman Catholics and Southeastern Conference schools were made public a year ago. Gee spent a few months at Ohio State then took a job at West Virginia University first as the interim president, and then as permanent president, returning to a position he first held in 1981.

Ohio State "constructed a presidential search process to ensure that we would find the very best leader to propel Ohio State forward at an important point in its history," Lewis said in an email.

Chait said he talked with the board about potential questions for candidates, how candidates might view the board and the "overall market and state" of the university presidency. "There was never a favored candidate, a predetermined candidate or a predetermined outcome," Chait said Tuesday. "Absolutely, it was a completely open search."

Leetonia man gets probation for 3 counts of burglary

LISBON — Adam L. Lodge, 22, West Main Street, Leetonia, was sentenced in Columbiana County Common Pleas Court to three years probation including spending the first six months at the Eastern Ohio Correction Center beginning on Tuesday. On March 14, Lodge pleaded guilty to three counts of burglary for breaking into the home of Jerry Reed, state Route 558, Leetonia, on Nov. 4, Nov. 7 and Nov. 12, 2013. During the break-ins Lodge took coins, a 22-caliber revolver and a 12-gauge shotgun.

Daniel M. Duke, 22, St. Clair Avenue, East Liverpool, stipulated to violating his probation on a domestic violence conviction from 2012. Duke was dishonorably terminated from probation, credited with 11 days served in jail and ordered to serve an additional 49 days starting on Saturday.

Lawmakers should pass tax on drillers

Gas and oil drilling have provided something of a lifeline for East Ohio counties where thousands of steel and aluminum mill workers have lost their jobs during the past several years. Indications are the economic impact of drilling will increase.

That was on the minds of many state House of Representatives members who have rejected a substantial tax increase on drillers, sought by Gov. John Kasich and many Democrat lawmakers.

The House approved a 2.5 percent severance tax rate on horizontal drilling this week. Kasich had asked for 4 percent. The bill includes other tax provisions, some of which will benefit drillers.

Industry representatives had argued that Kasich's plan would have increased taxes to the point many gas and oil companies would have found Ohio a bad place to do business. Most House members agreed, to judge by the 55-35 vote on the measure.

Preposterous arguments made by some in favor of higher taxes may have backfired. Rep. Mike Foley, D-Cleveland, called it "irrational" not to establish high taxes.

"I'm frustrated that the science (on climate change) is out there, the science is clear, and no one seems to be paying attention to it," he said.

That is an absurd reason to enact punitive taxes against drillers, of course. Gas is replacing coal — the primary culprit in climate change, according to people like Foley — as a power plant fuel.

State senators should approve the House bill and Kasich should sign it into law. From their standpoint, it is the best they are going to do in wringing new tax revenue from drillers.

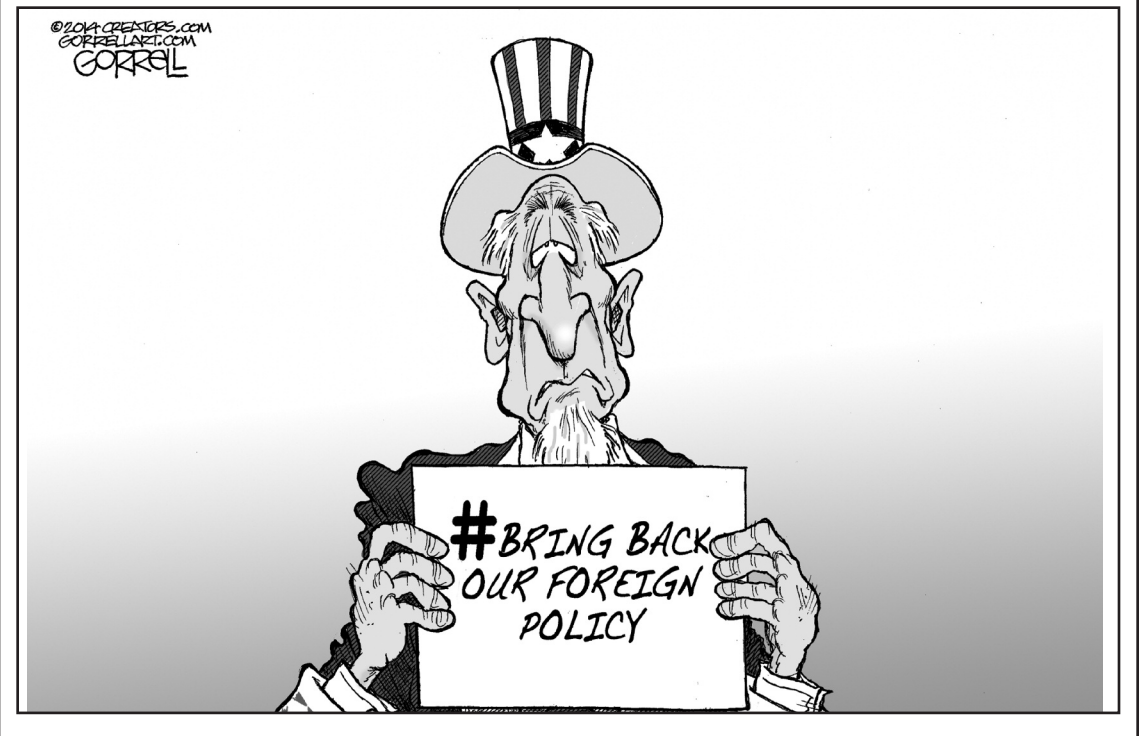

I took headlines about nearly 300 kidnapped Nigerian schoolgirls for the U.S. to offer that country help in fighting the Boko Haram terrorists responsible.

As it is, President Barack Obama's administration is only providing a few aircraft to search for the girls.

But Boko Haram has been terrorizing Nigerians for several years. The group is among the most vicious of all Islamic militant organizations.

One favored Boko Haram tactic is to surround a place of worship — of any faith — where opposition to the group has been heard. Then, the building is set afire and all inside — men, women and children — are incinerated.

No one knows whether the kidnapped girls can be rescued. But once the hunt for them is concluded, one way or another, the U.S. and other nations should help Nigerians in wiping Boko Haram out.

Hillary and Jill went up the hill women, who vote in greater numbers than men, have been reminded of how their sex is treated in a world that still favors men.

This is rare currency for me. I wrote a book called "Save the Males," after all. But my argument in the book and elsewhere wasn't about favoring men. It was a case for fairness toward boys and young men lest they grow up to become lesser men. Most mothers of boys know what I mean.

Fairness doesn't always mean absolute equality, nor can it be measured only by numbers. Reality is what it is — finally, a useful application of this annoying expression — and confirms century after century that most men and most women excel at different things. Although, let's be honest, women excel at pretty much everything. Certainly, leadership is not the exclusive domain of men. Nevertheless, Abramson, the first woman to lead the masthead of the nation's most prominent newspaper, was ousted amid stories of her "brusque" leadership style and, horrors, her gall in pursuing equal pay to her male predecessor.

We are left to infer two lessons: Women at the top should be sweet and nurturing at all times; and, a woman who faints and falls, hitting her head, as Clinton did, can't be trusted to lead the nation. This would be because she is ... a woman and, cut to the chase, she probably has something wrong with her brain.

One can understand why Times Publisher Arthur Sulzberger found Abramson a tad too tough. Recall that when he held a newsroom meeting to discuss then-reporter Jayson Blair's serial fabrications, Sulzberger brought along his stuffed moose.

As for Rove, well, he's Bush's brain. (Kidding guys.) But Rove is ruthless and never without intent. When he protested that he was merely pointing out that Clinton's concussion might have caused brain damage, he might as well have said, "I didn't mean she's demented and this is probably why she can't remember what she did the night four Americans died in Benghazi, including our ambassador. Just sayin' it's possible."

Obviously, Clinton will have to reveal her health record if she intends to seek the presidency. Meanwhile, everyone knows what's up. A woman's "brain damage" is a man's "accused rape." Though cleared of illness or crime, there's always lingering doubt. He might have raped her. She might be ... damaged goods.

A plethora of other connotations and associations attach to the brain-injured woman. Emotionally unstable, mentally incompetent, the fainting woman who can't unscramble her busy little head. Not long ago, women were "put away" for a "nervous breakdown." It's all there but the straitjacket.

Even if one thinks the country doesn't need another Clinton White House, a sentiment shared by many Democrats — or if you're of the Benghazi/Benghazi/Benghazi persuasion — the overarching impression is that Clinton was attacked unfairly. Ditto Abramson, who was fired effective immediately, which usually means shown the door without so much as a pit stop.

Fairness, in other words, is the whole kit and caboodle, and women are especially sensitive to its applications. Is it fair to suggest that one man's attack on one woman — or one woman's firing for being brusque — somehow reflects poorly on all men? No, it's not fair, but we're talking politics, where perception is reality. Plus, we're talking about a particular woman (Clinton) and a particular man (Rove) with all the attendant history and baggage.

Obviously, all women don't think the same and many will disagree with me here. But there's a commonality among women that defies simple political categorization. Call it secrets of the powder room. You've always wondered what they were doing in there? Plotting.

Finally, a word about brusqueness. Having cut my teeth in the old, male-dominated newsroom, allow me to clue you in. Editors were chain-smoking, ink-stained, fact-obsessed derriere-kickers, to put it politely. They'd chew you up and spit you out over a dangling participle. Three factual errors in a year and you were out.

And Abramson is too "brusque"?

These were already tricky times for male candidates running against women. But this latest confluence of events just made them trickier. An impression of unfairness has made an imprint on the collective female brain and, well, you know how women can be.

The (Toledo) Blade, May 19

School suspensions and expulsions often lead to students' idleness, falling back, and dropping out. It's no surprise that nearly 80 percent of prisoners list truancy as their first offense, the U.S. Department of Justice reports.

So-called zero tolerance policies, which became popular in the 1990s, have led to more police and security officers in schools. Without policy changes, including early and consistent intervention, school infractions such as disorderly conduct and fighting will lead to excessive time away from school, criminal records, and an insidious school-to-prison pipeline.

In Toledo and across the country, black students are three times more likely than whites to be suspended or expelled. To alleviate the problem, the U.S. Department of Education issued recommendations this year, such as dropping hyper-zealous school discipline policies and ensuring that teachers and other school personnel are trained to resolve conflicts and cool classroom disruptions....

To their credit, school districts have become increasingly aware of the problem. They have adjusted discipline policies and practices that have disproportionately affected African-American students and other children of color. And they're getting results....

Here and around the country, zero-tolerance policies have hindered the education and prospects of many students, especially those of children of color. New disciplinary policies that aim to resolve problems while keeping young people in school are changing that trend.

But it can't change fast enough to save children with enormous potential to contribute to society from wasting it in the school-to-prison pipeline.

Newly-elected Narendra Modi may be Margaret Thatcher of India defeated Congress party in India than with the victorious Bharatiya Janata Party. You could tell that the White House was less than overjoyed at the election of Narendra Modi when the spokesman fairited boilerplate praise of a "free and fair election."

Are there sensitivities regarding this particular small-government guy? Sure. India is not Indiana. The man who has just been elected prime minister was until recently included on a list of people prohibited from entering this country by the State Department.

His exclusion arose from an ugly episode of ethnic violence and murder in the province he governed, Gujarat state, in 2002. A train carrying mostly Hindus returning from a pilgrimage was firebombed, killing 59 people, including 25 women and 15 children. Muslims were thought responsible, and Hindus responded with a horrific murder spree of their own, killing as many as a thousand Muslims. Modi, as governor of Gujarat state, was held responsible for not doing more to protect the Muslim minority. India's Supreme Court, however, ruled that he was not culpable.

Most of the coverage of India's election described Bharatiya Janata as a "Hindu nationalist" party, so it was surprising to see the party performed well even in regions with large Muslim populations. Reuters quoted a Muslim leader in West Bengal, Syed Mohammed Khalid, who said that Muslim voters were not alarmed by Modi, but in any case: "This (was) not a vote on communal lines. This (was) a vote for development and for jobs."

Looking only at his economic record, Modi appears to be the Margaret Thatcher of India. Like Thatcher, Modi is the child of a small businessman, a tea seller in Modi's case. Like her, he is not from the aristocracy. In fact, he's not above a little reverse snobbery about his lower-caste origins. Claiming that the Congress Party had wondered how a tea seller could be prime minister, he sniped, "I sold tea, not the country."

While most regions have languished under Congress Party rule for the past decade — rule characterized by cronyism, corruption and welfare handouts to various constituencies — Gujarat state has become a powerhouse. Modi has sought to reduce red tape, worked to ensure a functioning infrastructure, including a reliable power supply, and welcomed foreign investment. He has sought out trade relationships with Japan and Israel. Poverty in Gujarat has plunged, and the state has been listed by the Cato Institute as among the best in the nation for citizens' rights, governance quality and economic growth.

Modi may well boost India's prospects at a time when most of the world's economies are in what economists gloomily label "secular stagnation." If Modi truly implements free-market reforms, he may provide a much-needed object lesson for the rest of the (kind of) free world. Though he won the election in a landslide, there are reasons to keep expectations modest. One is India's entrenched and very reform-averse civil service. The other is the temptation of flashy government-backed projects. Modi has spoken of bullet trains linking Indian cities, which could wind up as expensive white elephants. The key for India's economy, as for any economy, is for government to provide the environment in which private industry can expand and thrive, not to shoehorn investment into particular ventures.

At the World Economic Forum in Davos, Switzerland, earlier this year, the countries listed among the least regulated — Singapore, China, Britain and Germany — also showed the best growth rates. Bumping along on the bottom are France, Spain, Greece, Italy and Brazil. During President Barack Obama's tenure, the U.S. has slipped from 23rd to 80th place in terms of regulatory burden.

Obama was scornful of the Republican critique on regulation during the 2012 campaign. "Cut two regulations and call me in the morning," he mocked. Investor's Business Daily reports that it is now easier to start a business in Slovenia, Estonia and Hungary — all formerly communist countries — than in the U.S.

Obama remains wedded to the kind of anti-business policies that a majority of Indians just rejected. Unlike the voters of India, he seems immune to learning from experience. We'll see whether the same can be said of American voters.

SALEM FROM 1A

Traina asked, "Who pays?" and Councilman Rick Drummond said any costs, commercial or residential, will be paid for by the applicant. He said the Housing, Planning and Zoning Officer would inspect it and Traina asked about maintenance.

Drummond said the owner would maintain it, noting that one person approached him about a proposed range.

"While it was initiated by one, there may be more (behind them)," he said and Traina pressed him asking how much support "with all the time and effort."

Council President Bret Apple said, "People can approach their councilman ..." and Traina again asked if one person was worth all the time while noting he was opposed to it.

Drummond said many great ideas have begun with one person and Councilwoman Cyndi Baronzzi Dickey asked Traina if he was opposed to it whether it was residential or commercial?

Traina said he isn't opposed to the range, but "all the time and effort for one person ... a lot of this has been going on a year."

In other business, resident Trish Ricosky wanted more for kids to do and suggested a skate park. She said the only thing to do is the Super Cruise and the local parades are small.

"Kids don't want to go," she said, adding the Salem Community Center is too expensive for many.

"You guys are losing so much money because there's nothing to do," Ricosky said and asked council to change the way things are.

"They're bored," she said.

Councilman Clyde Brown agreed explaining an attempt at a skate park years ago eventually failed.

Also, Matthew Campanelli had an issue with speeding on East 6th Street and wondered about placing a speed bump between the high school and church in the 1200 block. He was referred to the street committee.

Another guest, Lisa Cahill read a number of survey-result comments from the Salem Talks Facebook page regarding what would make Salem better.

Lower rent, improved buildings, a more business friendly atmosphere, more jobs, enforced zoning laws, addressing the downtown sign issues, more restaurants, removal of dumpsters from properties, and enforcement of tall grass issues.

She noted that property, like the lot behind city hall, could be used and suggested guidance documents from other cities be studied.

Also, Scott Cahill talked about moving forward. He is developing the property in the 600 block of East State Street and noted he wants the best things "for our city."

Cahill said he applied for membership in the Salem Rotary Club and was rejected.

"I've never been rejected by anyone before," he said, adding "I want to get into a position to move forward."

He said, "Can we get there? We're working to make things difficult to get things done."

He said, "I'm putting everything I have on the line..."

In other business, Drummond said he was disappointed Law Director Brooke Zellers, who was absent from the meeting, did not have a representative of his office attend.

"If he can't be there, someone from his office should be there," Drummond said. "It's not the first time." Drummond added that he would follow up with Zellers.

In his report Service Safety Director Ken Kenst said the paving of all the state routes should be completed in a "couple weeks" after curb ramps and a second layer of asphalt are applied.

Kenst said leaf cleanup is still under way and there are leaf bags at city hall. The street sweeper is also out every day the weather allows.

Auditor Betty Brothers said an insurance check for $18,659 was received for the damaged sign at Centennial Park and the 2013 financial report is complete. lshields@salemnews.net

Pa. gay marriage ban struck down

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Pennsylvania's ban on gay marriage was overturned by a federal judge Tuesday in a decision that legalized the practice throughout the Northeast and sent couples racing to pick up licenses.

U.S. District Judge John E. Jones III called the plaintiffs — a widow, 11 couples and one couple's teenage daughters — courageous for challenging the constitutionality of the ban passed by lawmakers in 1996. "We are a better people than what these laws represent, and it is time to discard them into the ash heap of history," the judge wrote.

The judge declined to put his ruling on hold for a possible appeal by Republican Gov. Tom Corbett, so it went into immediate effect. The governor, who opposes gay marriage, did not issue a statement or indicate whether he would appeal. However, his state party chairman complained that an "activist" judge had usurped the power of the Legislature.

Amid a frenzy of celebration across the state, county offices in Philadelphia stayed open late to handle marriage applications, while officials in Pittsburgh were closed for election day but accepting them online. Couples must wait three days before getting married, unless a sympathetic judge grants a waiver.

Joe Parisi told his partner to "jet out of work" and get to Philadelphia City Hall. "We didn't want to take the chance of having this be challenged and missing out on our opportunity," said Parisi, a Philadelphia resident who plans to marry Steven Seminelli. They were among the first to get a license Tuesday afternoon, just hours after the judge's ruling.

The judge also ordered Pennsylvania to recognize same-sex marriages performed elsewhere.

Vic Walczak, legal director of the American Civil Liberties Union of Pennsylvania, which pursued the case, said of the ruling: "It's everything we had hoped for."

gas station once located at the front of the dealership (the location of the gas odor and severed sewer line is at the rear). BP is the process of cleaning up the contamination, and the village asked the area around the severed sewer line be tested as well. BP complied, and no detectable levels of contamination were found.

After hearing nothing from the village in the two weeks since the test results were released, the Mullens followed through last week on their threat to move most of their business back to Elkton. They also brought in porta-potties for customers but placed them prominently at the front of the property facing the main thoroughfare through town, along with a sign asking passing motorists to honk if they supported them.

Prior to Tuesday night, village Solicitor Virginia Barborak had been trying to contact BP in the hopes of convincing the company to do all of the work. She had also recommended the Mullens sue the bank for selling them the property without sewer service.

After the meeting, Mr. Mullen said he and his wife took down the sign and moved the porta-potties away from the street, with some people stopping to help.

"I thought they were more than fair," he said of council, "and we appreciate all of the support from the community."

Following are the terms of the agreement:

— Lisbon will install a new sewer line that will extend from Jefferson Street east through the alley behind the dealership.

— The Mullens will be responsible for running the lateral line connecting the dealership to the new sewer line, but the lateral line must be made of EPA-approved materials. The village will concrete and blacktop the area excavated for the lateral line.

— The village will waive the minimum $600 tap fee.

— The Mullens must abandon the old lateral line and obtain written approval from BP for the project to be undertaken.

"I'm just glad to see it done. I think there was a lot of a miscommunication," said Councilman Jeff Snyder.

Prior to the executive session portion of the meeting, two audience members were critical of council's apparent failure to assist the Mullens.

"If they're paying taxes, they should have sewer service," Bill Catlett told them. "The city disconnected them and the city should reconnect them."

Another man said the Mullens purchased the building in good faith, and the village should help them. "If you want re-elected I would say you need to help these people out," he said.

ZONE FROM 1A

Should the city establish an enterprise zone that would encompass the Reichard area the company could receive a property tax abatement.

Commercial and industrial businesses located in an enterprise zone do not automatically receive benefits, they must enter into individual agreements with the city first, Herold said while giving a brief presentation to council Tuesday.

Tax incentives are negotiated between the city and business once an agreement is in place.

Herold said the city could establish a zone anywhere it chooses within city limits, although once a zone is established more cannot be added later, and suggested establishing the entire city as one zone to cover every area.

Enterprise zones have been established in Wellsville, St. Clair Township, Leetonia, East Liverpool, East Palestine and Center Township, according to his information.

Of those, only two agreements are currently active, and both are for Pennex Aluminum in Leetonia.

Herold said Leetonia officials were wary of creating a zone at first. "At that time everyone was hesitant, council and the school board especially. By the time I was a prosecutor they got to the point where they were wanting to extend that agreement. Now Pennex Aluminum, they are making a $30 million investment out there," he said.

The zone was created in 2000.

School boards only become involved if a city opts to establish a zone that is upwards of 75 percent property tax involved and a 10-year duration.

In order for a zone to be created council must pass legislation that would then be forwarded to county commissioners for their approval. "I would think that commissioners would be on board," Herold said.

The zone would also need to be certified by the Ohio Development Services Agency before it can be established and that process typically takes 60 days.

If the city enters into an agreement with a company the company is required to send reports to the county development department showing they are fulfilling the agreement, and those reports are also provided to the county's tax incentive review council.

"You folks have a say in that and we will advise the state whether or not we believe the agreement should continue in full force," Herold said to council members.

The city is not obligated to enter into any agreements with companies located in a zone, he added.

Following some questions as to whether the portion of the city located in Mahoning County should be in a zone and whether Fairfield Township could be involved, council approved a motion to authorize Willard to continue researching the matter.

Herold said once legislation is passed, should council agree to that, the whole process would take about five months.

Reichard said his company is looking to have the new facility constructed by the end of this year and council members were in favor of getting the ball rolling soon to help with that process.

No action was taken on creating a zone that evening, however.

another offense.

However, Schiavoni said he hopes the tougher law will encourage more people to buckle up their children and prevent more deaths in crashes like the one Benzal was involved in. Four of the seven children riding in that vehicle were not buckled in. Neither were the two adults.

Also speaking at the kickoff event was Lt. Joe Dragovich, commander of the Lisbon post of the highway patrol, who talked about how many deaths there have already been in Columbiana County this year. There have already been eight fatal crashes with 10 deaths and not a single person among those killed was wearing their seat restraints.

Dragovich pointed out it is predictable that those who are not wearing a seat belt are more likely to be killed in an accident. He notes 88 percent of those who die in crashes are unrestrained.

Additionally, while some people believe it is a privacy issue, wearing a seat belt is their choice and they believe they are a safe driver. Dragovich counters by noting the seat belt is protection against other people's bad choices. The other drivers can be distracted or under the influence of alcohol or drugs and the impending accident is out of the safe driver's control.

County commissioners and law enforcement officials from the highway patrol, county sheriff's office and local police from across the county were also on hand for the event.

Tim Ginter kicks off bid for Ohio House

SALEM — Before a Sunday afternoon crowd of more than 100 enthusiastic supporters at the Salem Community Center, Tim Ginter formally kicked off his bid as the Republican nominee for Ohio House District Five.

Ginter, 58, a long-time Salem and East Liverpool resident, quickly got to the heart of why he is running for this office, stressing four overarching issues:

- 1) Jobs — "We need to create an environment where businesses can not only survive but thrive," Ginter said. "I will go to Columbus to fight for our small businesses — this includes farmers — because they are the backbone of Ohio's and Columbiana County's economy. I will work to reduce the red tape and excessive regulation that strangles small businesses today."
- 2) Fiscal restraint — "I will work to reign in unnecessary government spending and seek to reduce the tax burden for both individuals and businesses," he said. "I want to empower individuals by giving back to them more of their hard-earned income."
- 3) Protection of the Second Amendment— Ginter, a long-time member of the National Rifle Association, said, "The right to own and bear arms is a fundamental liberty established by our Founding Fathers and one which must be protected, and will be protected when I take my seat in Columbus."
- 4) Education — "I will stand up for fair education policies for our students, teachers and parents. I believe every school should have adequate funding to provide a world class education, but I do not believe we can solve all the challenges we face in education by simply throwing money at it," said Ginter.

The event was kicked off by Columbiana County Republican Chairman David Johnson, and Cub Scout Braden Royea led the assembled in the Pledge of Allegiance. A brief list of those attending included Columbiana County Commissioner Mike Halleck,

Columbiana County Commissioner Tim Weigle, Columbiana County Auditor Nancy Milliken, Columbiana County Sheriff Ray Stone, and Northeast Director Ohio Republican Party Perry Alexandrides. Also in attendance include both District One Representative Ronald Amstutz and District 91 Representative Clifford Rosenberger. Both are running for and one of them will be the next speaker of the Ohio House. (Submitted material)

Consumers National Bank breaks ground for new corporate headquarters, Minerva Branch

MINERVA — Consumers National Bank broke ground today on its new Corporate Headquarters and Minerva Branch at 614 E. Lincoln Way in Minerva. Ralph J. Lober, II, President and CEO of Consumers National Bank, Laurie McClellan, Chairman of the Board of Directors, along with Directors, local officials, representatives from MagniFI, Consumers' design/architect partner, and general contractor N.L. Construction Corporation, turned the first shovels of earth during the groundbreaking ceremony for the new building as the entire Minerva staff and other local officials observed.

Due to consistent growth and addition of staff over the last several years, the bank has outgrown its original 1965 building and subsequent additions. Construction is now underway on the new, state-of-the-art headquarters and branch with completion expected in the third quarter of 2015.

"Our decision to maintain our new headquarters in the original location in Minerva that our founders selected was critical to our Board and management team as community bankers. We believe it exemplifies our commitment to the community and to our customers. Our roots and our future are in Minerva," said Lober.

"Consumers National Bank is proud to be investing more than $7 million in the local economy through this capital building project. We specifically selected a local general contractor who will utilize local subcontractors and local workers for many aspects of the construction. As a local business, doing business with other local businesses is essential to us," said Lober.

"Consumers' expansion is not only enlarging the bank, it is fostering economic growth through wages and benefits for our growing staff members within Stark and surrounding counties," said Lober.

"Our entire staff in Minerva is thrilled at the prospect of gaining much needed space and upgraded facilities provided by the new building. The 30,000 square foot facility will provide room for 50 percent future growth as well. The building will provide a greatly enhanced customer experience as well as improved efficiency and communication. It will also allow us to offer customer services and in-house training that we currently do not have sufficient space to provide," said Lober.

The new building includes a banking lobby and administrative offices on the first level and corporate offices on the second level. The first level includes a training facility and space for civic events. The new branch will feature a universal banking concept, drive-thru teller windows, a drive-up ATM, and a night depository.

The growth that Consumers National Bank has experienced over the past five years is evident in customer growth and asset size. Consumers has exceeded 13,000 customer households and has over $375,000,000 in assets. As a result of this growth and in order to maintain its exceptional customer service, Consumers continues to expand its work force. Consumer has over 130 employees throughout the region; approximately 45 work in Minerva. After completion several additional employees will be relocated to Minerva. (Material submitted)

Prisoner freed 90 years early to appeal sentence

DENVER (AP) — A Colorado convict sent back to prison after being mistakenly released 90 years early will appeal his sentence, his attorney said Tuesday, claiming it was cruel and unusual punishment to put him back behind bars after he started a family and reformed his life.

The move came a day after Rene Lima-Marín spoke to The Associated Press in his first public comments about the case, saying he was unaware of the error that set him free for six years.

"I never thought that this would happen," he said Monday in a phone interview from prison.

Lima-Marín, now 35, was convicted in 2000 on multiple counts of robbery, kidnapping and burglary after he and another man robbed two Colorado video stores at gunpoint. A judge issued him back-to-back sentences for a total of 98 years.

But a court clerk mistakenly wrote in Lima-Marín's file that the sentences were to run at the same time. Corrections officials depend on that file to determine how much time an inmate should serve. Lima-Marín was released on parole in 2008. He got a job, got married and had a son before authorities realized the mistake in January and sent him back to prison.

"To give a man this false sense of hope and allow him to create a family and give birth to child and believe he could lead a normal life as a father and a husband and to then snatch him away from that is extremely cruel," Orlando attorney Patrick Megaro said.

Megaro also represented Cornealious "Mike" Anderson, a convicted robber who didn't report to prison — despite trying to do so — for 13 years because of a clerical mistake. Anderson was jailed for nearly a year before a Missouri judge freed him this month.

Prosecutors have said that Lima-Marín was fully aware of the clerical error and never notified authorities as he set about building his life. Rich Orman, Arapahoe County senior deputy district attorney, said Tuesday that the "just" sentence would survive an appeal and that Lima-Marín's attorney is "wrong on the law."

"He doesn't understand the factual background, and the courts will uphold the lawful and just minimum sentence that was imposed," said Orman, who was alerted to the clerical error in the case. The state attorney general's office will handle the appeal.

One of Lima-Marín's victims also said he got the sentence he deserved. Shane Ashurst said Monday in his first public comments about the case that he thought he was going to die when Lima-Marín and another man held him face down at gunpoint during a September 1998 video store robbery in Aurora. "They put a gun to the back of my head and said, 'This is where you're going to die,'" said Ashurst, who worked at the store and has since moved to Memphis, Tennessee.

"Even though this happened a long time ago, it's not something you ever forget. You're going to live with it the rest of your life, and he should live with it the rest of his life," said Ashurst, who said he suffers flashbacks.

Lima-Marín said he has changed from the foolish 20-year-old he was at the time of the robbery into a dedicated father and regular churchgoer.

In this photo taken last week, Ukraine's navy ships are docked in Odessa, Ukraine. As separatist unrest batters eastern Ukraine and tries to disrupt the interim government's presidential election on Sunday, Ukraine's military is facing a severe crisis. The navy has lost two-thirds of its vessels, the army is desperate for basic equipment and its defense ministry has taken to hustling 50-cent donations that people can make with mobile phone text messages. (AP Photo)

Ukraine's hobbled navy: 'Times not the best'

OODESSA, Ukraine (AP) — Ukraine's navy is in Odessa's harbor, though it can be hard to spot.

It's tucked behind a collection of storage tanks and overshadowed by immense cargo vessels docked nearby. There are a couple dozen boats, few much larger than a decent-sized yacht and many in desperate need of repair. The government is begging the public to help pay their bills.

This is what's left of Ukraine's fleet since Russia annexed the Crimean Peninsula two months ago, taking with it the navy's key base and most of its ships.

"Times are not the best for the fleet now," admitted Capt. Oleh Chubuk, spokesman for Ukraine's naval command.

The reality is far worse. Separatist unrest is battering eastern Ukraine, break-away leaders have vowed to disrupt Sunday's presidential elections and Crimea has been annexed by Russia.

Ukraine's military is facing its worst crisis with a navy that has lost two-thirds of its vessels, an army desperate for basic equipment, and a defense ministry that has taken to hustling 50-cent donations that people can make with mobile phone text messages. It has raised more than $1 million so far that way — enough to buy one interceptor missile on a U.S. Navy warship — but military officials are thrilled.

"We'll use the money to buy the things we lack, like bulletproof helmets and medical supplies," said Bogdan Buta, Ukraine's deputy defense minister.

Kiev's Western allies, meanwhile, including the United States, have shown little willingness to help it rearm, fearing that more weaponry could upset diplomatic negotiations or provoke Russian President Vladimir Putin further.

The loss of Crimea, a peninsula that dangles from the Ukrainian mainland deep into the Black Sea, meant the loss of Kiev's naval headquarters as well as a series of navy bases and all the ships and boats in port there.

This has left Ukraine with little influence over its own crisis and, despite its long coastline and numerous ports, little power in the Black Sea.

In Odessa, the port city that is now the main base for the Ukrainian navy, the sense of betrayal by Russia is deeply felt.

Formed after the 1991 breakup of the Soviet Union, Ukraine originally didn't even think it needed a large navy, said Evgenii Livshyts, a retired submarine captain living in Odessa. Moscow, the new naval commanders thought, would remain a friendly presence as Russia kept its huge Black Sea Fleet in Crimea and paid Ukraine rent for the base.

Kiev "believed that the elder brother would protect it and everything would be the way it used to be," Livshyts said. "Our attitude was: 'We don't need much ... We believe you, big brother!'"

This port city, with its wide tree-lined streets and ornate 19th-century buildings, has become a tourist destination in recent years. But it was built by sailors and traders and still retains the feel of a shipping town. The oldest part of Odessa is built on a hill high above the port, and sailors, with striped uniforms that make them look as if they are stepping out from a World War II movie, are a constant presence.

An undisclosed number of Ukrainian sailors switched sides to work for Russia after the takeover of Crimea, including the country's naval chief, Adm. Denis Berezovsky. But remaining sailors insist morale has not been battered.

"You should have seen their eyes!" said Livshyts, gleeful at the memory of Ukrainian sailors who refused to join the Russian navy. "You can create any kind of weapon. But this spirit, you can't create it. It's just there."

For weeks after the takeover, Ukrainian sailors played cat-and-mouse games with Russian ships, trying to keep their vessels from being taken by Moscow as long as possible. The standoffs were mostly nonviolent, with Kiev fearing that dead Russian sailors could be used as an excuse for more aggression.

Originally outfitted with castoff Soviet equipment and overshadowed by Moscow's forces, the Ukrainian military has never had it easy. Successive Kiev governments kept its funding to the minimum, and officials say former President Viktor Yanukovich, the pro-Russian leader who fled earlier this year after months of protests, purposefully starved his own armed forces so they would pose less of a challenge to Moscow.

Ukraine spent $5 billion on defense last year, less than 10 percent of what Russia says it budgeted for its military.

The results have been predictable, with Ukrainian soldiers lacking everything from training to body armor. Acting President Oleksandr Turchynov recently said the country had just 6,000 combat-ready soldiers.

The navy has fared worse. Ukraine's fleet, so decrepit that many ships need the help of tugboats to go anywhere, was reduced from about 75 ships before the Crimea takeover to 28 afterward. Russia is slowly returning some seized ships, apparently dismayed by their poor condition.

"The Ukrainian navy was weak before, but now it's even weaker," said Pavel Felgenhauer, a Moscow-based military analyst. "They've got only one ship good for action."

That ship, the 400-foot Hetman Sagaydachnyi, evaded capture because it was on its way back from an anti-piracy deployment off the Horn of Africa when Crimea was seized. The frigate's arrival in Odessa a few days later, despite announcements from Russia that it had switched sides, was a big morale boost.

Felgenhauer isn't surprised at the high morale. Despite its long history of troubles, and its desperate lack of funding, Ukraine's military now seems intent on rebuilding.

"They're trying to put their act together and fill their ranks with volunteers," he said.

Chubuk agreed, saying the navy is now "trying to spread its wings."

US business hacking victims fell prey to mundane ruses

WASHINGTON (AP) — The victims were their own worst enemies. The hacking techniques the U.S. government says China used against American companies turned out to be disappointingly mundane, tricking employees into opening email attachments or clicking on innocent-looking website links.

The Justice Department said in an indictment Monday that five Chinese military officials operating under hacker aliases stole confidential business information, sensitive trade secrets and internal communications for competitive advantage. The U.S. identified the alleged victims as Alcoa World Alumina, Westinghouse, Allegheny Technologies, U.S. Steel, United Steelworkers Union and SolarWorld.

China denied it all on Tuesday.

Housing debt still traps 10 million Americans underwater

WASHINGTON (AP) — Nearly 10 million Americans remain financially trapped by homes worth less than their mortgage debts — an enduring drag on the U.S. economy almost seven years after the housing bust.

During the first three months of this year, 18.8 percent of homeowners with a mortgage owed more on their loans than their properties would sell for, according to online real estate database Zillow. That's an improvement from the 25.4 percent figure of a year ago, but the share of such "underwater" homeowners is about four times the historic average.

An additional 18.1 percent of mortgage holders were "effectively" underwater: They had equity, but proceeds from selling their home would be too low to recoup the sales costs and put a down payment on a new property.

Target faces identity crisis as fashion hits, pricing lag

NEW YORK (AP) — Target is having an identity crisis.

The nation's third largest retailer was once high-flying, but now it's struggling to find its place in the minds of American shoppers.

Once known for its cheap chic fashions and home accessories, Target faces competition from trendy chains like H&M. The discounter also hasn't been able to ditch the image that its prices on staples like milk are higher than rivals like Wal-Mart. And it's battling the fallout from a massive data breach that has hurt its reputation.

Meanwhile, Target on Tuesday fired the president of its Canadian operations following some missteps in that country. The ousting comes two weeks after the Minneapolis-based discounter announced it was looking for a new leader after the abrupt departure of its CEO.

All of Target's challenges come as the broader retail industry is dealing with a slow economic recovery that hasn't benefited all Americans equally and a move by shoppers away from buying in stores and toward shopping online.

Antitrust experts: 2 big cable TV deals better than 1

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Antitrust experts say AT&T's $48.5 billion proposed bid for DirecTV could reap immediate regulatory rewards.

Coming so quickly on the heels of a rival cable company merger — the pairing of Comcast and Time Warner Cable — makes it easier for regulators to approve both transactions because they create two counterbalanced giants in pay TV.

Experts say the potential benefits of bigger scale, cost savings and promised reinvestment in networks to create speedier connections could be seen to outweigh the damage done to consumers by a reduction in the number of competitors.

EU charges 3 banks with market fixing to manipulate prices

AMSTERDAM (AP) — European Union regulators on Tuesday charged banks JPMorgan, HSBC and Credit Agricole with colluding to manipulate the price of financial products linked to interest rates. The European Commission's move is the first step in a legal dispute that can cost the banks dearly. The Commission's top competition regulator, Joaquin Almunia, said the banks will now have a chance to respond to the preliminary findings.

AstraZeneca shareholder urges Pfizer takeover offer rethink

LONDON (AP) — AstraZeneca shareholder Schroders has urged the pharmaceutical firm to reconsider its rejection of a takeover offer from U.S. drugmaker Pfizer.

The fund manager, which holds a 2 percent stake in AstraZeneca, is the biggest shareholder to call publicly for renewed takeover talks. Schroders said Tuesday it is disappointed by the board's quick rejection of the latest offer.

The board of AstraZeneca this week rejected an improved $119 billion takeover offer from Pfizer, saying it significantly undervalued the company and its drug portfolio. Under British takeover rules Pfizer has until Monday to submit a new offer, but it has said it won't raise its offer again.

Home Depot IQ results sag

ATLANTA (AP) — Home Depot's fiscal first-quarter net income climbed 12 percent, helped by better sales. But the quarter's results fell short of expectations as a cold and rainy spring hurt results. Spring is the biggest season for home improvement retailers as homeowners and others work on their yards and gardens.

Parade of GM recalls rolls on; 2.4M vehicles added

DETROIT (AP) — Another day, another recall from General Motors.

At least that's the way it seems as the automaker reviews safety issues across its line-up of cars and trucks in the wake of a mishandled recall of millions of older small cars.

The number of recalls issued this year by the nation's top carmaker rose Tuesday to 29 as GM announced four separate actions affecting 2.4 million cars and trucks. While no fatalities were involved in the latest recalls, the problems were serious enough that GM has temporarily halted sales of the vehicles.

GM has recalled 13.6 million vehicles in the U.S. since early February. That's more than the total number of cars it sold here in the last five years, and already surpasses GM's previous U.S. recall record of 10.75 million vehicles, set in 2004. By comparison, rival Ford has recalled 1.2 million vehicles in the U.S. this year, while Toyota has recalled 2.9 million, according to federal data and the companies.

The parade of bad news is part of the fallout from GM's recall of 2.6 million Chevrolet Cobalts and other small cars for defective ignition switches — and a consequence of government regulation. GM says it's redoubling efforts to resolve outstanding safety issues. It's hiring 35 new safety investigators and is issuing recalls one by one, as soon as a decision is made. GM can't wait and announce a group of recalls once a month; it's required by federal law to report defects to the government within five days of discovering them.

A failure to follow that law landed GM in hot water with the government. The company agreed last week to pay a $35 million federal fine for concealing a deadly defect in the ignition switches for more than a decade. GM says at least 13 people have died in crashes linked to the problem, although trial lawyers suing the company say the death toll is at least 53. Congress and the Justice Department have ongoing investigations.

More recalls are likely. GM spokesman Alan Adler said the company is making progress on reviewing older investigations, "but work is continuing."

The recalls haven't yet impacted GM's U.S. sales, which were up 7 percent in April. But Akshay Anand, an industry analyst with Kelley Blue Book, said Tuesday's order to dealers to stop selling the 2015 Cadillac Escalade and 2014 Buick Enclave, Chevrolet Traverse and GMC Acadia until they're repaired could give more buyers pause. The initial recalls covered older models like the discontinued Cobalt; now they're affecting newer models.

Detroit-based GM said it will take a $400 million charge for repairs on all vehicles recalled so far this quarter. That includes the $200 million charge the company announced last week when it issued five recalls covering 2.7 million vehicles. That's on top of a $1.3 billion charge the automaker took for recalls in the first quarter.

The recalls announced Tuesday were:

— 1.3 million Buick Enclave, Chevrolet Traverse and GMC Acadia crossovers from the 2009-2014 model years and Saturn Outlook crossovers from 2009-2010. GM says the front safety lap belt cables can wear down and separate over time. GM has told dealers they cannot sell new or used models of the vehicles until repairs are made.

— 1.1 million Chevrolet Malibu sedans from the 2004-2008 model years and Pontiac G6 sedans from 2005-2008 because a shift cable could wear out over time. If that happens, the driver may not be able to select a different gear, remove the key from the ignition or place the transmission in park. GM knows of 18 crashes and one injury from the defect.

— 1,402 Cadillac Escalade and Escalade ESVs from the 2015 model year because a faulty weld could result in partial deployment of the front passenger air bag in a crash. GM has stopped the sale of the models and alerted 224 current owners not to let occupants sit in the front passenger seat until the vehicle has been repaired. GM knows of no injuries related to the defect.

— 58 Chevrolet Silverado HD and GMC Sierra HD pickups from the 2015 model year because retention clips attaching the generator fuse block to the vehicle body can become loose and lead to a potential fire. No crashes or injuries are related to the defect.

HOROSCOPE

By HOLIDAY MATHIS
5/21/14

Gemini Sun

There's a smooth start to this solar cycle thanks to the support of Mars direct, the Pisces moon and an auspicious arrangement of Jupiter and Saturn that's lining up. If you have an agenda, you'll get the feeling that there are people out there to support it. If you don't have an agenda, the inspired Pisces moon helps you create one.

ARIES (March 21-April 19).

Take winning and losing out of the equation now because truly the outcome will not matter in the least. The most important thing will be to show up and do your thing.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20).

High enthusiasm is what's needed. The positive people around you will mirror the confidence that's deep inside you. You have what it takes. Believe it.

GEMINI (May 21-June 21).

You'll look at your living and working environments as though they are pictures you're painting. Once you get rid of a few things, these pictures will artfully come together.

CANCER (June 22-July 22).

The more steps you can take to automate your life the better it will run. From automatic bill paying to the thermostat, make "set it and forget it" your new motto.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22).

The moral themes of the day will include playing fair, telling the truth, sharing and helping. In that spirit, all of the hard work will be accomplished during the day, and the evening will be filled with stories.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22).

Because you can't fight gravity, you may as well align yourself with it. Falling well is a skill that babies learn fast. Successful people keep this skill sharp throughout life.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23).

Toughness training has its place in your life, but this isn't it. Be gentle with yourself instead, showing yourself the same kindness and patience you would afford a frail elder or a small child.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 21).

The natural reaction to today's challenges will be to tighten up. Stop and reset your thinking. Breathe deeply. From a relaxed place, you will make connections and solve problems.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21).

Your mind is a time-traveling machine. Turn this function off for the morning, because if you're stretched into the past or the future, you'll miss the opportunity staring you in the face.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19).

Don't judge yourself. That's just mean. Furthermore, concerning yourself with what others think of you is silly. You don't have time to indulge habits of defeat.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18).

You'll have to gloss over some of the finer points to make sure that the bigger issues get resolved. Think in broad strokes, and suddenly pettiness drops away.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20).

As you weather a transition, there is comfort in familiar things. Old favorites -- food, entertainment, people, habits -- will center you and enhance your interactions.

TODAY'S BIRTHDAY (May 21).

You are highly intuitive now, reading the thought bubbles above people's heads. June gives you a stage for your talent. You have intense powers of focus and group support in July, so your ideas will take off like wildfire. September brings an important sale and the start of a lifestyle improvement. Scorpio and Libra people adore you. Your lucky numbers are: 4, 22, 35, 1 and 16.

PISCES MOON OF INTUITION AND INSPIRATION: The auspicious omens just keep coming this week, with Mars turned direct in Libra, the sun entering bright Gemini and a very lucky trine on May 24. Take advantage of the Pisces moon of inspiration, and make a plan that supports you on all levels. The best plans speak to your soul and support you emotionally, while taking care of the practical, physical and material aspects of life.

Under this sky, it all starts with a vision. If you can picture yourself in a beautiful place and repeat the vision with increasing amounts of belief and passion, you will start to draw that image into reality.

Pisces is the final sign of the zodiac and a blend of all the signs that came before. As the moon glides through this part of the sky, you may sense all of the resources available to you and feel rich, indeed. Inspiration truly can be found wherever you look for it! Think of yourself as the artist of your life and your life as a beautiful work in progress that is worthy of your best efforts.

CELEBRITY PROFILES: Indie rocker Gotye topped the charts in several countries around the world with "Somebody That I Used To Know," but this Taurus musician's reach is about to expand even farther. He has been commissioned to write music to send into space -- a representation of what humankind is into in the 21st century. Gotye was born under an entertaining Leo moon.

Let meat take break

Heloise

Dear Heloise: In several recipes, it says to let the MEAT SIT for 10 to 20 minutes before carving or serving. My question is: Before serving, are you supposed to once again put the meat back in the oven to warm up, or serve it at room temperature? -- Linda S., via email

NO, you do not put the meat back in the oven or on the grill after it has rested, because it stays warm during this time as long as you don't cut into it.

Cooking meat causes the juices to go toward the center. By resting the meat, you are letting the juices redistribute throughout the meat again. It's the juices that make the meat more tender and juicy when you eat it. Cutting into meat right after cooking causes all the juices to run out onto the plate, resulting in the meat being tougher when eating. -- Heloise

CLEAN HANDS

Dear Heloise: When I pack a lunch for my daughter to take to school each day, along with utensils, a napkin or paper towel, I include an individually wrapped, moist towelette. This way, I can be sure she has washed her hands before eating, because there is not always time for her to run to the bathroom. -- Lauren H., via email

LEFTOVER SEAFOOD

Dear Heloise: I have always been afraid to take home leftovers from a seafood restaurant. And I won't save seafood dishes that I have cooked in my own home, either. Can you safely keep leftover fish and shellfish dishes, and if so, for how long? -- Linda W. in New York

You sure can, Linda, so start taking home those leftovers for the next day! The U.S. Department of Agriculture states that fish and shellfish leftovers can be kept in the refrigerator for three to four days, or stored in the freezer for up to three months. As always, though, make sure the food smells good and not "fishy" before reheating and eating. -- Heloise

EXTRA EGGS

Dear Heloise: When we buy a new carton of eggs, we usually have a few left from the old carton. We have tried to precariously balance them on top of the new carton, with predictable, messy results.

I finally had the idea of cutting an empty egg carton apart and saving a portion of the end that can securely hold our leftover eggs. There is no room in the space in the refrigerator door where the egg carton fits, but there is extra room in the butter drawer. We know to use any eggs stored here first, as they are older, and we haven't had any breakage yet. -- Jason S. in Ohio

MAILING COOKIES

Dear Heloise: I often mail cookies to friends. To protect the cookies, which are placed in bags, I recycle the plastic sleeves in which my morning paper is delivered. I fill the newspaper bags with the appropriate amount of air to cushion the box and keep the contents from moving about. -- Ruth B. in Louisiana

Childhood sexual abuse haunts survivor

DEAR ABBY: After years of carrying this guilt, I want to tell my story. It may help others.

When my grandfather tried to rape me, it was at night when everyone was asleep. I stopped him as much as a 10-year-old could. The next day he wrote me a letter saying he was sorry for what he did. It read, "If your dad finds out, it will KILL HIM." Strong words for a 10-year-old, so I buried the letter in the back yard. He never touched me again.

Five years after that, Grandpa was arrested for molesting my younger brothers. As a young girl, I didn't know men molested boys. I found out after my grandfather went to prison that he had also molested my dad and his sister when they were children.

Please warn parents to educate their children. Tell them that even someone they love does not have the right to touch them in a way that makes them uncomfortable.

My dad felt guilty for the rest of his life for what happened to us because he had let this monster back into his life. If this saves one person from the shame and guilt I have carried, it will have been worth it. -- WISH I HAD TOLD IN FLORIDA

DEAR WISH YOU HAD TOLD: I agree with you about the importance of parents teaching children the difference between an appropriate touch and one that isn't, and how to set boundaries. If those boundaries are violated, children should be instructed to immediately tell an adult. If it's not a parent, then tell a teacher, counselor or school nurse, all of whom are mandated reporters. Children should also tell if a friend confides it has happened to him or her, because secrets like this are harmful not only to the victim, but also to any children in the vicinity who might also be at risk.

It may assuage your guilt to know that molesters often blackmail their victim into silence. I heard recently from a woman who said her father told her when she was a child that if she revealed what he was doing, he would kill himself. (It wasn't until many years later that she finally realized if he had, he would have been doing everyone, including her sister, a favor.)

DEAR ABBY: I am 26 and have been dating this guy I really like for three months. He is great.

My biggest setback is his body hair. He honestly has more body hair than I have ever seen. This has kept me from being physically attracted to him.

I think everything is moving in the right direction, but I don't know what to do about this issue. Should I love him how he is, or ask him to get rid of it? I don't want him to feel self-conscious because he's an awesome guy. -- IN A HAIRY SITUATION IN ARIZONA

DEAR IN A HAIRY SITUATION: This is a sensitive subject, one that should be approached with as much diplomacy as you can muster. Because he seems to have everything else going for him, but the body hair is a turn-off, do talk to him about it.

Fortunately, over the past few years men have become more open to removing excessive body hair -- or at least cutting it back so it's not so overwhelming. (This is called "backscaping.") There are also the options of waxing or laser treatments, if he is willing.

Conflicting diagnoses require followup

Dr. Keith Roach

DEAR DR.

ROACH: Would you please explain the difference between Parkinson's disease and Lyme disease?

My husband has been told by a neurologist that he has Parkinson's. A regular medical doctor who also works in the field of alternative medications or supplements has told him that he has Lyme disease. This doctor uses the Meridian Stress Assessment test, and he has been treating my husband with many supplements for his condition. We have been told that there isn't a test to determine Parkinson's. All supplements and testing for Lyme disease are out-of-pocket costs. We would appreciate your opinion or thoughts on his condition. -- P.L.

South Range takes district title

By CHRIS RAMBO
Staff Writer

GREENFORD—The South Range softball team had ample opportunity to lose its composure in Tuesday's district title rematch with Ursuline.

However, each time they looked ready to fall apart, the Raiders steered themselves and refused to crack.

In a nail-biting finish, South Range got free of a bases-loaded jam in the bottom of the seventh to emerge with a 5-4 win over the Irish in the Lisbon Div. III district title game at South Range High School.

"We made a lot of mistakes tonight, but we showed the heart of a champion," South Range coach Don Feren said. "Every time we had a bad situation, heads didn't go down. We've done it all year."

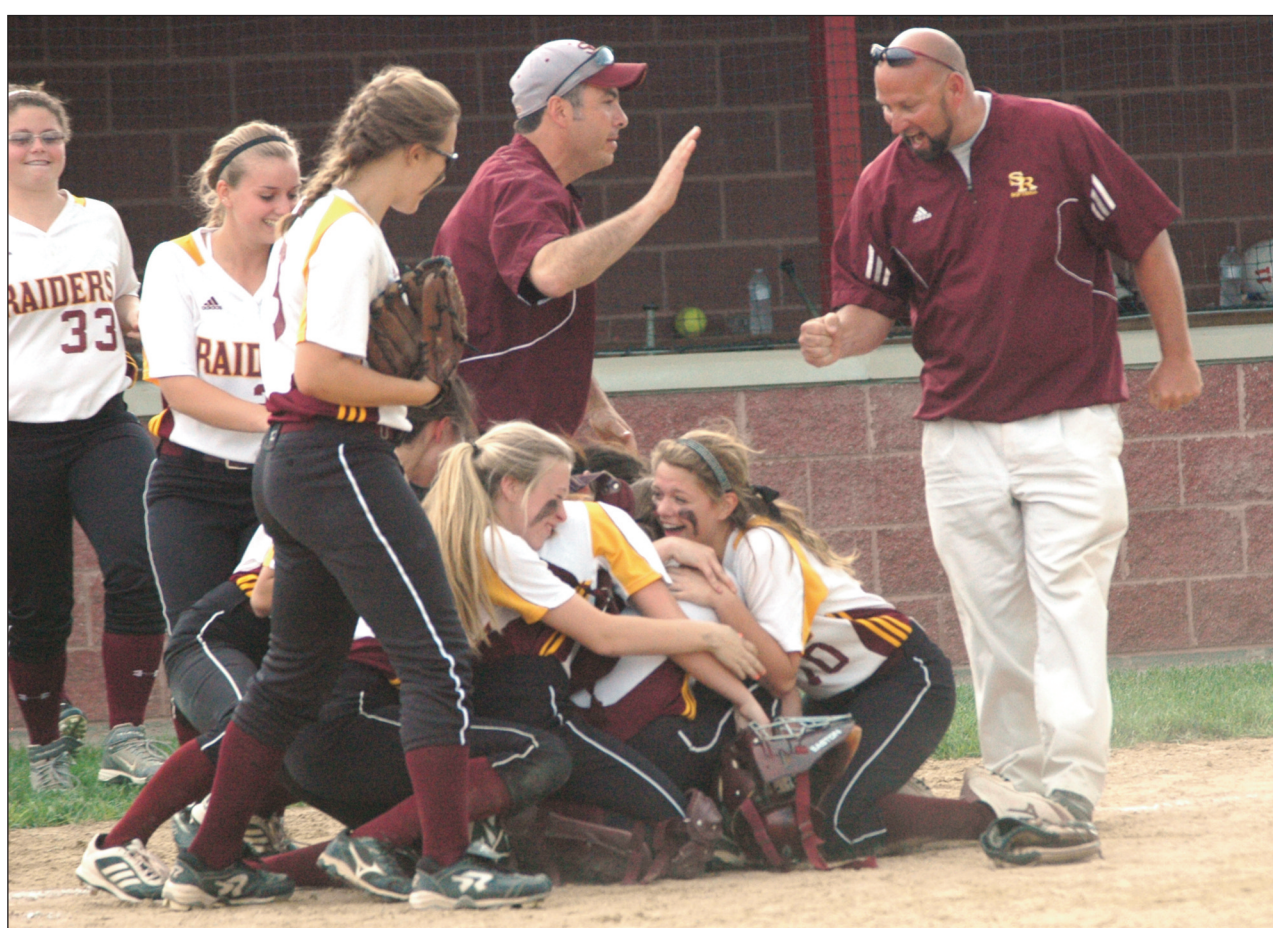

The Raiders move on to face Independence in a regional semifinal at 5 p.m. on May 29 at Massillon Washington High School. It is the Raiders third district title in the last five years and first since 2011. It was the second straight year that South Range and Ursuline met up in a district final. Last year, the Irish won 2-1 in nine innings.

"We had some unfinished business with Ursuline," South Range senior Stevie Taylor said. "Beating them this year for the district title makes it that much sweeter."

Like last year's game, Tuesday's contest was not for the faint of heart.

South Range—which had already blown a 3-0 lead through four innings—arrived in the bottom of the seventh up 5-3, thanks to a two-out, two-run single in the fifth by freshman second baseman Lydia Baird.

"There was a lot of pressure, but I tried to act like it was just me and the pitcher," Baird said. "I got a strike on the first pitch and just went with it to right field."

After giving up back-to-back singles to start the seventh, South Range freshman pitcher Caragyn Yanek composed herself and got a pair of strikeouts, bringing Ursuline's number-three hitter Macey Gunther to the plate with two outs and runners and first and second.

Gunther hit a hard shot to Stevie Taylor at short. Taylor knocked the ball down and made split-second decision to shovel to third for a force out. However, the toss sailed over Taylor Helon's head allowing a run to score and moving runners up to second and third.

"I was so upset with myself," Taylor said. "I wanted the ball hit to me, and I had a chance to end the game."

With the Raiders and their fans stunned, Yanek intentionally walked cleanup hitter Makayla Shore to load the bases, bringing up Stephanie Ohalek, who had singled and walked previously. With the count 1-and-2 Ohalek hit a foul pop up behind the plate that Sarah Moretti squeezed into her glove, giving the Raiders their district title.

"I felt complete relief watching the ball go into Sarah's glove," Taylor said. "I was so excited, I couldn't believe we held on."

The Raider bats came out ready against Ursuline pitcher Makayla Shore. The junior righthander held South Range to one run in last year's district final, but the Raiders spent all week studying her pitches and jumped to a 3-0 lead after four innings.

Jessica Skirpac got the Raiders going with a two-run single in the third. Codi Taylor singled and came around on a throwing error in the fourth. "We were ready for her (Shore) tonight," Feren said. "We did a great job of staying disciplined and making her throw strikes."

Ahead by three entering the fifth, the Raiders gave it all back. A throwing error by Caragyn Yanek with two outs opened the door to three unearned Ursuline runs. Taylor also had a throwing error, while Yanek uncorked two wild pitches. With the game tied at three and two runners on, Yanek escaped when she got Gunther to softly fly out to left.

"I was really nervous pitching out there today, and just went through a bad stretch in the fifth," Yanek said. "My teammates all had my back and were able to help me through it."

After throwing nine innings in Monday's district semifinal against Newton Falls, Yanek came up huge again for the Raiders, holding down an Ursuline lineup that returned eight starters from last year's district champion.

"We were able to split

Caragyn Yanek

game up among our pitchers all year," Feren said. "Caragyn wanted the ball today no question."

Game notes

• Taylor may have blundered at times, but she came up with the defensive play of the night in the third inning, going into the outfield grass to snare a liner by Shore, then heaving a laser to first to double off Gunther and end the inning.

"That's why she's the best softball player in the area," Feren said. "She helps us in so many ways."

• Technically the Raiders are the Lisbon district champions, but the semifinals and final were both played at South Range High School due to the Div. IV tournament being held at the Lisbon softball complex.

"We've hosted the district in year's past," Feren said. "We gave it up to Lisbon this year because of the paperwork and offered them the use of our facilities which are some of the best in the area."

Miller helps Western Reserve edge Columbiana

By STEVE RAPPACH
Staff Writer

LISBON — Just when things looked bleak for the Western Reserve softball team on Tuesday, the top-seeded Blue Devils made plays when it counted the most.

After trailing the entire Division IV district semifinal game against third-seeded Columbiana, the Blue Devils got the bats working with hits from Marley Oles and Alexis Lude, but it was Alexis Miller's RBI single that lifted the Blue Devils to a 3-2 victory and a return trip to today's district championship against Louisville St. Thomas Aquinas at Dickey Athletic Complex.

"I think we'll definitely be excited to be able to play district finals again," Miller said.

After trailing 2-0 in the bottom of the sixth inning, Maddie Kreitzburg hit a sacrifice fly to allow Aleah Hughes to score, followed by Alexis Lude's RBI single, and the momentum was on the Blue Devils' side as Miller brought in the go-ahead run.

"We were definitely down," Miller said. "Then we had that one hit that got us going, and from there we just didn't look back."

Hughes, who also picked up the win on the mound as she struck out 10 and walked two, felt relieved once Oles reached home.

Columbiana's Madison Roessler slides safely into home as Western Reserve's Marley Oles takes the throw. (Salem News/Patti Schaeffer)

"Once we scored the two runs, it became a confidence booster," Hughes said. "It was nerve racking, but we pulled through."

Western Reserve coach Joe Serensky noted the success of the Blue Devils, as well as the work ethic of Miller and Hughes.

"We've played great offense all season long," Serensky said. "Alexis really came through all season long because she worked hard all winter and she deserves the success she's had this season. Aleah and Maddie Kreitzburg have pitched well for us this year and have done very well."

The Clippers (22-5), meanwhile, drew first blood early in the first inning courtesy of junior Madison Roessler's solo home run, and the Clippers took a 2-0 lead in the fourth as Roessler scored on a passed ball. With strong defense for the first five innings, it appeared to be smooth sailing for the Clippers.

Then the Blue Devils went to bat in the sixth and the landscape changed. "I guess we were just worried about the speed of the pitches," Roessler said. "We made contact so we know it was going to go. We got down on ourselves after our first error or two."

Up until the sixth inning, the defense stayed strong behind pitcher Madison Macklin who had struck out one. Despite the struggle in the sixth, coach Jerry Beltempo decided to keep Macklin on the mound to finish the game.

"I had thought about changing pitchers, and then just figured to let her go," Beltempo said. "We had played well enough to win. We didn't deserve to lose, but we didn't deserve to win either."

As the Clippers conclude their school-record 22-win season, Beltempo took pride in the team despite the inexperience at the start of the season.

"Coming in we had to replace five of our nine starters," Beltempo said. "We were younger and inexperienced, but we played

Cavs get No. 1 draft pick, again

NEW YORK (AP) — The Cleveland Cavaliers' lottery luck just keeps going.

The Cavaliers continued their remarkable run Tuesday, winning the No. 1 pick in the NBA draft for the second straight year and third time in the last four. They moved up from the ninth spot, when they had just a 1.7 percent chance of winning the top selection.

"It seems surreal," Cavs vice chairman Jeff Cohen said. "This is three out of four years and we had a 1.7 percent chance of coming up with the first pick and we pulled it off again."

They drafted Kyrie Irving first in 2011 and will hope to do better with this win than last year, when they took Anthony Bennett, who had a forgettable rookie season.

Nick Gilbert, the son of Cleveland owner Dan Gilbert, was on the podium for the previous two wins, but general manager David Griffin was there this time.

Griffin had a pin on his lapel from his late grandmother and was carrying one of Nick Gilbert's bowties, which was as lucky in his breast pocket as it was with Nick wearing it.

The Cavs can now choose among the likes of Andrew Wiggins and Joel Embiid of Kansas, Duke's Jabari Parker, or another player from what's considered a deep draft.

"This means everything," Cohen said. "This is the deepest draft arguably since LeBron (James) and Dwyane Wade and Chris Bosh and Carmelo Anthony came out."

The Cavs won that one, too, in 2003, when they picked James. But they have been lottery regulars since he bolted for Miami in 2010, and they want that to stop.

"Rebuilding is a process and we lost a player a number of years back that it was going (to take) some time. Quite frankly it's taken a little bit longer than we'd like, but we've been patient," Cohen said.

"I think now is the time we're going to reap the rewards of our patience."

The Milwaukee Bucks fell one spot to second and the Philadelphia 76ers will draft third. The Bucks had a 25 percent chance of winning after a league-worst 15-67 record, but the team with the best odds hasn't won since 2004.

The expected strength of the class led to speculation that teams were tanking in hopes of getting a high pick. But the Cavs had playoff expectations, hoping a strong season could make them attractive to James if he was interested in returning home as a free agent.

Nick Gilbert said last year he expected the Cavs to be done with the lottery, but they were right back in Times Square after a disappointing season that resulted in them firing Mike Brown after just one year and a 33-49 record in his second stint with the team. Another top selection surely will make Cleveland more attractive to prospective coaches.

The city of Cleveland may be on a 50-year championship drought, but sure does have this lottery thing figured out.

The 2011 win was also a stunner, when the Cavs moved up from the No. 8 spot with a pick they had acquired from the Los Angeles Clippers.

And by moving up this year, they hurt the Detroit Pistons, who started eighth but by falling back, had to trade the pick to Charlotte as part of a deal for Ben Gordon.

Orlando dropped a spot to fourth and also will have the No. 12 pick from Denver. Utah is No. 5 and the Lakers and Boston Celtics couldn't make the most of rare lottery appearances, with Los Angeles at No. 7 and Boston at No. 6.

The 76ers couldn't move up even with Hall of Famer Julius Erving representing them, but they will have two top-10 picks: their own and New Orleans' at No. 10 from last year's trade that sent Jrue Holiday to the Pelicans.

"If we had No. 3 alone, I would be a little disappointed and so would our group. But the fact that we also have the 10th pick, we may have done better than anyone else," Erving said. "We can get two players out of this draft or leverage those two picks."

Still, the big winners — again — were the Cavs.

Nick Gilbert was the hit of the 2011 lottery, his big glasses and bowtie charming viewers. This time it was Mallory Edens, the 18-year-old daughter of incoming Bucks co-owner Wes Edens. She gained thousands of Twitter followers after her brief on-camera interview.

But her Bucks pin wasn't lucky enough to end the run of back luck for the worst teams.

"I was really nervous, but I'm really happy we got the second pick," Mallory Edens said.

Things kept rolling for the Cavs, who duplicated the feat of Orlando, which went back-to-back at No. 1 in 1992-93. The latter win, after the Magic had gone 41-41 in Shaquille O'Neal's rookie season, caused the league to change the lottery to a weighted format that gave the worst teams the most chances.

The tanking talk has led to discussions to change it again, something Commissioner Adam Silver has said will be discussed this summer. But he has also said that if there was an ideal solution, the league would have implemented it by now.

The Cavs like it just as it is.

Tribe tames Tigers

CLEVELAND (AP) — Trevor Bauer walked into the Indians' clubhouse lugging the javelin-like exercise bar he uses to warm up and zipped it inside a vinyl carrying case in his locker.

He packed the Tigers away almost as easily.

Bauer outpitched former Cy Young Award winner Justin Verlander and tamed Detroit's menacing lineup, leading the Cleveland Indians to a 6-2 win on Tuesday night.

Bauer (1-1), recalled earlier in the day for his second start this season, held the AL's top hitting team to two runs and seven hits in six-plus innings.

"He was aggressive, attacking the strike zone," Indians manager Terry Francona said. "He changed speeds and used all his pitches. That's not the easiest assignment, coming up from Triple-A to face them. He really did a great job."

Mike Aviles hit a two-run double in the second when the Indians scored four runs off Verlander (5-3), who didn't settle in until the damage was already done.

David Murphy homered in the seventh for the last-place Indians, who can sweep the three-game series with the Central-leading Tigers on Wednesday.

Torii Hunter and Alex Avila homered for Detroit, which has lost two straight road games after winning 11 in a row.

well for most of the games we played this year." The Blue Devils and Knights will battle for the Division IV district championship at 5 p.m. today. St. Thomas knocked off East Canton 15-7 in the other district semifinal.

GAME NOTES

- Western Reserve beat Columbiana both times in the regular season, and in each game, the Clippers scored two runs.
- The Blue Devils defeated the Clippers in softball district tournament action in the district semifinals in 2012 before falling to Jackson-Milton 3-2 in the district championship.

- Columbiana's 22-win season broke the school record for most wins in a season. The previous Clipper record was 21 in 2005.
- Western Reserve has eliminated Columbiana this school year in volleyball, basketball and softball tournaments, all during district tournament action.

"This is very exciting because there's obviously a rivalry in this," Aleah Hughes said. "Just knowing that we've beat them three times this year, it's a good feeling."

Moore community honors tornado dead on anniversary

MOORE, Okla. (AP) — An Oklahoma community devastated by a monster tornado a year ago marked the anniversary Tuesday with remembrances that honored the two dozen dead and looked toward the future, breaking ground for a new hospital and walking children along a route to a new school.

The storm on May 20, 2013, swept through Moore with winds of 210 mph, injuring hundreds of people and leveling more than 1,300 homes, schools and the hospital. Among the dead were seven students from Plaza Towers Elementary School.

Elementary school children from Briarwood Elementary School walked to a picnic Tuesday on the site where their school stood before being destroyed. Teachers at Briarwood and Plaza Towers had thrown their bodies over the students as the storm destroyed their buildings. Both schools will reopen in the fall.

At the ceremony, about 600 government officials, first responders and residents gathered for the tribute to the 25 who died in the storm and as a result of it, with a bell ringing by the Moore Fire Department Honor Guard.

"This is Moore, Oklahoma, and we're probably going to have another storm," Moore Mayor Glenn Lewis said even as strong winds blew, during the hospital groundbreaking. He encouraged people to educate their children about storm safety and build safe rooms for shelter.

First responders, many of whom were at the ceremony held on the site of the ruined hospital, had set up a triage clinic in the movie theater next door to treat the hundreds of people pulled out of the nearby neighborhood.

The new Moore Medical Center, a $29 million facility which is expected to be completed in fall 2016, will include a safe room big enough to house all patients and staff.

Moore City Councilman Mark Hamm, meanwhile, pointed to two new parks and two that have reopened in the last two weeks as signs the area continues to "regroup, rebuild and recover" from the storm.

Gov. Mary Fallin and U.S. Rep. Tom Cole joined city and hospital officials to honor the community, citing the "Oklahoma strong" mentality that made recovery possible. The "Oklahoma Standard" of caring and quick emergency response was a term popularized after the 1995 bombing of the Alfred P. Murrah building in Oklahoma City.

"It's important not to forget there are still Oklahomans that are suffering and recovering," Fallin said. "Yes we will recover, yes we will rebuild, and yes we will be even stronger."

Industry: Bakken oil not more risky

BISMARCK, N.D. (AP) — Oil industry representatives are pushing back against tougher rules for rail cars carrying crude despite a string of fiery accidents and insisting that oil shipped by train from the Northern Plains is no more dangerous than some other cargoes.

An industry-funded report released Tuesday said the volatility of Bakken oil from North Dakota and Montana is comparable to other light crudes.

But the report offers further evidence that Bakken crude is more volatile than heavier oils such as from Canada's tar sands, following similar studies by Canadian regulators and refiners. The results show Bakken oil is similar to light crudes produced elsewhere in the United States, with characteristics that fall well within the margin of safety for the current tank car fleet, industry representatives said.

Kari Cutting, vice president of the North Dakota Petroleum Council, said it proves federal rules "are sufficient."

A former senior federal railway safety official disagreed and said recent accidents are enough to justify government intervention.

"We already have examples of this particular crude going 'boom,'" said Grady Cothen, former deputy associate administrator for safety at the Federal Railroad Administration. "That's how it has to be treated from a regulatory standpoint despite the distinctions being made" by oil companies.

Oil trains in the U.S. and Canada were involved in at least eight major accidents during the last year, including an explosion in Lac-Megantic, Quebec that killed 47. Other trains carrying Bakken crude have since derailed and caught fire in Alabama, North Dakota, New Brunswick and Virginia.

from the Bakken oil patch. The sprawling oil shale reserve is fueling the surging industry in eastern Montana and western North Dakota, which is now the nation's second-largest oil producer behind Texas.

Tens of thousands of the older, defective rail cars are being used to haul crude in the U.S.

The National Transportation Safety Board has urged that they be retrofitted or phased out of service.

The North Dakota Petroleum Council, which represents more than 500 companies working in the oil fields of North Dakota and Montana, commissioned the $400,000 study of Bakken crude characteristics. The group said more than 150 oil samples were taken from well sites and rail facilities throughout North Dakota and Montana, and sent to independent laboratories for analyses. The results will be shared with federal regulators this month, the group said.

Last week, the American Fuel and Petrochemical Manufacturers, a lobbying group for oil refiners, found Bakken crude is no more risky or flammable to ship than other oils, if hauled correctly under current federal rules.

A Department of Transportation spokeswoman said the agency was reviewing the industry data even as it continues analyzing samples of Bakken oil gathered by regulators. Results of the government's testing have not been released. Canadian investigators have said the crude involved in the Lac-Megantic was highly volatile and comparable to gasoline.

Cutting disputed the need, expressed by many regulators, for stronger tank cars to better resist rupturing in case of derailment. "It's not proven that existing steel is going to prevent those breaches," Cutting said. She also said that newer, stronger DOT-111 tank cars have 14 percent less capacity than older tank cars. Cutting said making those cars the standard will require hundreds more trains to make up the lost volume, actually increasing the risk of accidents.
